

Last Leaves

Issue 1 | Fall 2020

Last Leaves

Issue 1 | Fall 2020

Last Leaves

Issue 1 | Fall 2020

Last Leaves: Issue 1

Copyright © 2020 by Last Leaves Magazine

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be used or reproduced in any form, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or scanning into any information storage and retrieval system, without written permission from the author except in the case of brief quotation embodied in critical articles and reviews.

All works published herein are the sole property of the writers/authors.

Edited and compiled by Cailey Thiessen, Kiera Baron, and Maina Chen Cover design by Kiera Baron

Notes from the Editors

This issue was born out of a desire to create a poetry community in the absence of physical gatherings. Kiera Baron, Maina Chen, and I wanted a space to talk poetry, and starting Last Leaves gave us the chance to do that while discovering and encouraging new and accomplished poets. We read each and every submission and spent every Tuesday night discussing the attributes in each poem, ultimately deciding on these 150 or so poems for the first issue. We were blown away by the quality and variety of work sent to us, and we are so grateful to everyone who contributed.

~Cailey Johanna Thiessen

I wanted nothing to do with poetry. I learned in high school that poetry had to rhyme and if it didn't, it wasn't good. But six years ago I met two beautiful, amazing souls who I credit all my love of poetry and the growth of my poetic voice to: Jim Ellefson and Cailey Thiessen (the very one above). And Maina Chen earns all my gratitude for showing me different genres. But this is more than us. It's Warren Baker, who gave my words concision; Kim MacQueen, who taught me everything about publishing; and all of you. Without each of you writing, reading, submitting, we wouldn't be here today.

~Kiera S. Baron

I'm still in awe that this is finished. A massive shoutout to Kiera and Cailey—without them, there would be no lit mag. I wouldn't have even attempted poetry. I used to think it was an elusive pinnacle of writing that only those who had an absolute mastery of English could do. I'm so glad that's blasted out of my brain now. I deeply appreciate those who share their writing and their process towards growth. It has been an absolute privilege and joy to work with these phenomenal ladies and review all the exceptional works we've received. Thank you all, time and time again.

~Maina Chen

Content Warning

Some poems in this book contain content that may be sensitive to some readers (including struggles with eating, body image, and self-harm). Most of these poems are accompanied by very obvious titles, so please feel free to read, skim, or skip them as you need. At Last Leaves, we understand how reading sensitive content can not only affect our daily lives but our mentality and overall state-of-being. Please take care of yourselves, and take breaks reading the content if you need.

Contents

The Dancer	xii
the dancer learns how to write a poem.....	2
My Daughter Whirls	3
LA SERENISSIMA.....	4
Kissing Evening	5
The City of the Dead.....	6
WOLF MOON ECLIPSE	7
Moths	8
Sins and Van Gogh	9
Marilyn and Me.....	10
Opening Day of The Van Gogh Sunflowers Exhibit	11
Bouquet	12
A muted search.....	14
The Enchantments of Seeds	16
The world is quiet here.....	17
nightly beauty drips in these hollow creases	18
My Partner is My Mask When I Need to Be Lighter	20
COURAGEOUS MOMENTS.....	21
Now Hiring losers.....	22
A scene perceived.....	23
Pala Casino 7am	24
The Wonder Wheel.....	26
INNER MONGOLIA.....	27
Off the Highway, a Road	28
WAVE	29
Hoard	30

The Thai Daughter's Homecoming	32
A Morning Drive in Iceland	33
Columbia River.....	34
SEASONS.....	35
Whirly August.....	36
Two leaves	38
the loneliest tree in the world.....	41
Donald Wyman Crabapple	42
Four Trees	43
Ode to Balboa Park San Diego.....	44
Carry your sadness well	46
EVEN THE STARS HAVE THEIR OPINIONS.....	47
same time next week	48
HOW THINGS ARE THESE DAYS	50
this moment.....	51
Knowing God	52
Ode to a God.....	53
Denominations	55
The Seas of You.....	56
Rising.....	57
The edge.....	58
The Scent of the Sea	59
Think About it Cousin	60
This is What We Never Notice During the Day	62
Mendelssohn writes a violin concerto	63
Reading Lips.....	64
Life's a soap on my television screen	65
a brighter phoenix.....	67

Only the Flares Remained.....	68
Flaming Champagne.....	69
When.....	70
Blue feathers.....	71
ROBERT'S GUILT.....	72
Samhain	73
Separation Retold.....	75
What's Mine	76
Fall Thunder (V2).....	77
Researching	78
Up from the deep.....	79
The edge.....	80
The Secret Wounds Show.....	81
Drowning	83
how i explained suicide to my boss's dog.....	84
That Night Among the Reeds.....	86
Trigger Warning.....	87
Consent.....	88
WHY THAT PARTICULAR DRESS.....	89
Correlation Between Fatigues And A Simple Cotton Dress.....	90
Electric City.....	91
Letter to My Mother, From Quarantine.....	92
Blockade	94
Medical Leave	95
I Once Removed all the Mirrors in My House.....	97
POEM TO MY HANDS	98
Today my heart rests in your palm as a peach freshly bitten.....	99
Lemonade. No Ice	100

The Pain from my Childhood	101
Isotopes	103
CABIN FOOD	104
My Daughter Hates Basil	105
a new england winter.....	106
WARMTH.....	107
Into the Sunset	108
But the Sun, Also, Is a Liar.....	109
Trousers.	110
Six Translations Of A Painting Seen From A Train.....	111
Magenta	113
Gen Z.....	114
Gen Z.....	115
Reprobate creature.....	116
Resignation letter.....	117
We are Tuareg men now	118
ATTITUDE.....	119
Something will finally ferry us across the shore.....	120
Locked in a High Castle Where Every Sound Repeats Itself	121
The Shower Head is a Microphone	123
Ground Yourself in Reality Today	124
The Sweetgum Tree	125
In Waves Of Light.....	126
I think about walking through a forest of tall, slender trees	127
Strange Trip.....	128
WILDEST DREAMS	129
Attachment	130
College goblins	131

the winning loser	132
Rain, rain.....	133
LOCAL WEATHER	134
Synonyms	135
Axolotl	136
The Crossing.....	137
Another Aubade	138
the matter is	139
SHIPS	141
Mallards	142
Mantis	143
Transformations	144
Place	145
Burned Up Bundle.....	146
A Bastard's Vow	147
Awakening	148
Brain as an Unwound Clock.....	150
Shooting Star.....	151
In Praise of a Sweet Tooth.....	152
Aerial	153
Implosions.....	154
Inauspicious	155
Multilingual	156
Pure Music	157
eternal.....	158
Author Bios.....	159

The Dancer
Emily Blackmore

the poet learns how to dance (a pantoum)

Raphael Luis Salice

feet together, but leave a little gap in between the legs—this is step one the flicker of candles, silhouettes mimicking just the two of us, the dance has begun between the legs, butterfly wings flutter my hand tracing the rhythm of your waist just the two of us—the poet én the lover one leg forward, keep the other in place your hand tracing the rhythm down my waist deep in thought while the violin weeps now move two feet back, make me tiptoe in place as we make abstract shapes on rose-bed sheets the violin weeps softer, before it fades feet apart, knees buckled, lips on the mouth on rose-bed sheets, a mess has been made silhouettes lie still before the flame dies out the dancer learns how to write a poem

Raphael Luis Salice

hold the pen like how you hold my hand spin my ink around, in cursive, incursive let the words you etch sink into sandpaper, rub against it, smoothen your verses reduce our movement to a metaphor, with which you stab on corkboard, ideas why don't you kiss me until your lips 'come sore that way your words will be all about us don't forget to breathe, caesura, say Surah, rhyme each line with our limbs and joints learn the language of our bodies, making use of our shapes, with our arches and points an ink-stained mirror under the flickering light this is the way you will learn how to write

My Daughter Whirls

Liz Whiteacre

Under bursts of fire, your cheeks look feverish —bangs curled, matted to your temples—and you laugh, out of sync with the tinny Sousa band.

Your feet stomp asphalt, naked heel pivoting.
Your circle is so wide, your dress billows and your arms' trajectories guide metal sticks that crack and blur.

In this moment of your joy, all I can think is careful, you could burn yourself in this dance beneath a sky sprinkled with supernovas, but I press my lips,

this time, I don't say it.
 I watch you spin—a comet in orbit.

LA SERENISSIMA

Michael Angelo Stephens

Night sky over Venice, the names of The dead at San Michele, Ezra Pound, Igor Stravinsky, Joseph Brodsky, and

On every balcony, in every Doorway, the ghosts chant, history sings along, Humming through the Adriatic gloaming,

This liquid city, more dream than real On the dusky Rialto and its dank Sidereal alleys and side streets skirting lesser Canals and bridges; we walk after these Ghosts and sunset, the disgorged ocean liners Re-peopled and sailed off, eerily Venice

Is empty, we go (andiamoci), Dreaming, smoke of fog at our ankles.

Kissing Evening

Yash Seyedbagheri

streetlamps kiss the dying day goodbye and the evening hello butter-colored kisses planted across verdant yards mingling with branches and blossoms lavender and pink burst over skies and footsteps clickety-clack, clickety-clack on the way to bars which beckon with booming jukebox and small worlds behind booths friends waiting to tell of failed tests lecherous bosses, pranks, bills, credit card debts and gratitude for booze and evening while the moon rises, triumphal lady they laugh, a little too loud trying to ignore emails darting while the moon fights off foam clouds drifting in, out, and then into the emails call special meetings called for tomorrow an exam that seems a little more daunting who was Nicholas II? Let's research him over vodka but the clouds have darkened the vodka diluted the bar clears, dorms and study sessions calling moon's smile extinguished by the early hints of morning soon the sun will banish the moon until the streetlamps kiss the day goodbye once more it's only twelve hours

The City of the Dead

Brittany Coffman

crooked statuesque neck in chair muffled gold against winter palming slicing heartless diaspora into weeping glass

*Rex tremendae majestatis Qui salvandos salvas gratis Salva me, Fons Pietatis
Salva me, Fons Pietatis*

rust bared nails between her thighs finches snapped to dead red attention the king-hawk calling the end

Quantus tremor est futurus Quando Judex est venturus traitor's game to translate bone matching anger to smoked silver teeth burning uses of shadow maiden

Damnata, invisus ubique Ab omnibus, ad Infinitum

throne varnish of purloined wolf eggs the king-hawk goes unseen as the button moon shatters into masculine tear milk

WOLF MOON ECLIPSE

Karla Huston

Somehow when I'm not looking, the moon will disappear under its creeping halo of red. It's minus two outside, and I'm not going out to look for it, trusting it's there, like I trust tomorrow will arrive before I can say it is today, again.
I believe in the moon—red glow or not, wolf howling at my heels—or not. The moon needs to do what moons do. A new moon is a trick of darkness. It's there.
Darkness is not forever.
It's there to remind us.

Moths

Jeremy Nathan Marks

The moon is a lantern drawing moths to spectral fabric they fill out the night's fluttering form searchlight stalking a watchman.

With the Moonflowers

B. A. France

quiet night staccato song of crickets in the darkness interrupted by the desperate honking of a goose a single goose flying overhead between the creeks

again and again calling in search of a response

with no answer in silence he circled again and we looked up into the black night

with the moonflowers

Sins and Van Gogh

Antara

You pick roses from a garden Precariously rid them of their thorns And begin arranging them in a crown on top of my head.
You hum an off-key tune I think it's my favourite song.
The sky is the hue of Van Gogh's Sunset at Montmajour And I wonder if you'd have preferred sunflowers instead.
The red of these roses looks like the red of your tongue I tease you
And you stick it out at me.
We stay like this for long enough.
The sky is now the colour of Vincent's Starry Night.
Your eyes get that glazed look they so often do when you're with me.
If I could brush it away I hope you know I would.
Instead I go on my tip-toes My flower crown slides back And I kiss you.
We stay like this for long enough.
And I wonder once again if you'd have preferred Vincent's fifteen sunflowers instead.
You shift my crown back into place And pull out the flask of brandy you always carry.
It is a reminder of everything that has changed.
Roses over sunflowers.
Glazed eyes over indulgent smiles.
Brandy over sunlight.
We lay under Vincent's stars and play pretend Because letting go under these stars would be a waste of art.
You behold this moment
A crown over my head and my head over your chest.
And some part of you begrudgingly whispers "I love you"
And I do too.
You stare at me
And I stare at my sins that you carry.

Marilyn and Me
Danielle Wirsansky

Opening Day of The Van Gogh Sunflowers Exhibit

Alexandra Graffeo

The day the Sunflowers exhibit opened they gave out sunflowers to everyone in the city, and the place was an explosion of yellow and green. Pedals were getting tied up with petals, causing traffic jams punctuated with tinkling sounds of bike bells, whole blooms were floating in the water.
Tourists reached their hands over railings to grab the floating bouquets from their canal cruise ships, coffee shops surrendered their green-leaf decals for fresh, living, golden substitutions, although inside the shops the smell remained unchanged.
It was like the sun itself had come down to the city to celebrate, and had gotten caught up in the wheel of a two-seater bike, and burst into a million pieces. It was chaos, the kind that bewilders, so beautiful that it seems as if it had been carefully created and not at all spontaneous.
It was swirls of daylight in shades of gold, twirling Across a sky of billowing white clouds, it was Cafes that were lit up by an ethereal light While people passed by on cobblestone streets.
It was gardens teeming with irises, it was Almond blossoms against a bright blue sky.
It was a day for living, with all the joy and despair That live inside everyone but always hides away In shame and fear that we will be judged too harshly.
I think Vincent would have been quite taken with the vision of yellow turmoil. It might have seemed to him to be his own wild mind, come to life in that floating city of bridges, and maybe, he would have felt welcome and at home at last.

Bouquet

Jessica Covil

Petals in all the vibrant colors of summer,
the season you moved in.
A sunflower in the center to really emphasize the matter.
A few roses, soft pink—not so hot like downstairs where there's no A/C, but like the calm, cool haven that is our one-bedroom walkup.

A flower I call my favorite but didn't know the name of:
larkspur, or maybe delphinium for July, which is almost like our birth month—when we emerged, "living together," after almost nine months.
Home had already been growing on us.

One of these on each side like bookends or parentheses, a perfect unity. Pink gladiola a shade softer than the roses, the larkspur's purple worn by a strand of snapdragons, the orange ranuncula always in bunches of three, making me wonder at the significance.
At last, a single daisy, yellow echoed by the trumpet of a daylily.

I remember studying that bouquet so I wouldn't forget: how it looked and smelled and made me feel, fulfilled my long-held fantasy of romance—small gestures of a lover made for no particular reason.
It was just Tuesday, and everything was radiant.

Amaryllis

William J. Joel

A red that bleeds its color into winter's gray.
Like us, it only lives in countable time, its only goal to meet our need for light, then die, as we will, someday, leaving less than ashes behind.

This red, its petals, large and folded back like women's lips in black & white; you know the color even when no one has added tint. But that is paint that's quickly wiped away.

My red is not a color, not a smear of blood or wax, and not a hope of light.
No, mine's a breath I take while passing by its bowl of earth, a brief perfume of dark, caressing soil.

A muted search

Mugu Ganesan

I typed 'rare flower' in Google.
I was also suggested the most pristine, beautiful, and colorful.
You are all that, but, most importantly, you are rare.

So, I ignored and continued to look for the rarest flower on earth.

I found a Jade Vine in Philippines that is blue to light green in color and is luminous in the night - yes, you are the light. The flame that burns darkness.

I found a Youtan Poluo in China that blooms once in 3,000 years and indicates reincarnation of Buddha - *oh, just to see you bloom. I can die and be born again.

And again.*

I found a Chocolate Cosmos in Mexico that is deep red and used to bloom in the evening but is now extinct - no, you are around. You exist. In all splendor.

Maybe you are the Kadupul in Sri Lanka that blooms at midnight and perishes before dawn, rarely seen by any - close, like a dream. But you never perish. I won't let you.

I continued to fly across a multitude of terrains, till the end of earth in each direction - sitting on my couch looking at my phone, Silencing the need to scream your name out loud, and kept tapping, typing, swiping, hoping to find you.

The Enchantments of Seeds

Margaret Koger

I scatter tiny zinnia seeds on soil where I should rather morning glories' twining stems and trumpet blooms with tendril curls in comfort rings recall the joie de vivre of youth vines cloaking the carport's open side peasants to legions of roses nearby.

My brother's gift of a bare-root rose given soil and water and sun, blossoms twice a year, arched over a ten foot trellis crowning our mother Queen of the May.

Haunts of roses and morning glories enchantments plaiting heaven's gate fill memories of childhood days as zinnias Cinder(not ella) my garden for I have no patience for pounding fence nails strung with twine, urging cautious tendrils to scale tough sisal.

No. I pray these scrawny zinnia seeds so flighty and episodic compared to morning glory, sweet pea, nasturtium their firm, round, plump seeds so easily resting under a half-inch blanket of soil.

No, I sow these wispy zinnias hoping they'll root, thrive, and bloom to glorify like Coronado coins, my will to thrive.

The world is quiet here

Kim Whysall-Hammond

Come with me on the wind says the dog and I walk, humming hot sun on my shoulder blades ready to cut through my one and only shirt.

She doesn't know I'm here on the lonely, less alone than home, street sneaking away to the Library notebook clutched tight maybe the dog will take it maybe he's in league with her and all adults telling me I read too much am too quiet need more air, exercise, chores need to learn what life is really all about, child what work is and it isn't something you read in books which just give your airs above your own real family.

The humming's still there like the sun no one on this street cares and so I am free just for now heading to the Library humming a song with a notebook and dreams.

nightly beauty drips in these hollow creases

Rushmila Khan

nightly beauty drips in these hollow creases, crisp and sharp, hence ready to snap glass fragile, we rest in our frozen niches. specificity, definite brush strokes as if sitting on a knife edge. stalactites dig into his back the monk doesn't stop meditating. the fungus eats away its legs he ponders over the art of patience. sickening fatalities meander their way through, my poetry fights when I can't.
sanctity hangs from the edge of my tongue. billows of grey from god, or writer's block.

I Have Become Dangerous

Freesia McKee

On inauguration day, I walked to the library. I carried in my bag a book about maps because I am curious about wandering. But, just the idea.

I drank warm chai out of a grey mug JoAnn gave me.
Before we knew what was going to happen. Remember he was put into power? Even the harm of the symbolism pierced us, hooked fish. We were jutting head-first into the atmosphere.

Two women on the corner are speaking about nuclear war. Our world is filled with women who talk about disaster. Two women on the spray-painted sidewalk, waiting for the bus. Two women in a kitchen, one sitting, her food brought to her, the other standing. There was so much waiting, for anyone, when it happened, a throng of grief. In my bag, I was a container filled with egg roll and rice on the barreling bus. I was spaghetti leftovers. I was frigid vegetable soup. I would say poems used to be a protest, but this implies a confidence in the art form. My grief painted a fabric banner too large for me to hold. I was written. Ever surprised.

I knew it was bigger than a single person, but I should have known something about collective experience winnowing to each, feeling for the new ruptures through membrane, new scars on the walls of my container, since when grief appears, she always writes the griever.

My Partner is My Mask When I Need to Be Lighter

Christian Hanz Lozada

I learned to mask my skin by asking for service through White Mom by getting jobs through White Brother by being treated like White Grandma's caretaker not family these instances taught me invisibility is bearable if you can wear another's skin and pull their joints like strings.

My partner learned to mask herself in my skin by hearing family stories through me by using my tongue to speak for her at family meetings by using my darkness as the password to cultural decisions by using my skin, she gets access to the things that matter: culture, history, place these instances taught me invisibility is less light and dark more a visual spectrum and while I can comfortably wear lighter skin I don't know how to let someone wear mine don't understand why someone would want to

COURAGEOUS MOMENTS

David Spicer

Some people say the world will end soon.
They wear masks and gloves to protect themselves.

I protect myself with special masks and gloves, staying inside among books and thoughts of you.

Thoughts of you among books keep me inside.
Together we live in this world and play Scrabble.

This world has scrabbled our lives together.
The virus separates but unites us.

Separate we unite against the virus.
When we're feeling brave we walk toward the clouds.

The clouds make us brave when we walk toward them.
We are airy, white angels of dying Earth, but we aren't dying angels of the dark Earth.

We are the reason the world will not end soon.

Now Hiring losers

Lauren Scharhag

Letter missing on the sign, message nevertheless received:
Now seeking sundown souls.
We usher out the day, leaving a blank slate for dawn and its fresh hot brews, its buttered biscuits, its cracked eggs.
Grains of salt and crumbs have been wiped from the table.
Empty condiment bottles and napkin holders will be filled again. At 2 a.m., we'll exit the employee door by the dumpster, cigarettes in hand, and know what possibilities await us in the pre-dawn hours.

A scene perceived

William J. Joel

Women, laughing, sharing stories on the breezy side.
Someone who was reading folded his book and tucked it, his table, vacant, but not for long.
The red-haired girl dispenses more coffee, more pastries, makes change in a flash with well-skilled hands.
That song, in the background, behind all the voices, the clatter of dishes, the shuffle of paper, I know it's a woman, singing, but nothing much else. This could be a coffee shop, diner, a restaurant, dozens of places where people commune. But now it's a memory, soon a forgotten, as I pick up my journal and walk out the door.

Pala Casino 7am

Christian Hanz Lozada

I'm dressed in clothes that could signal homelessness: dirty, holey, stained t-shirt dirtier, holier shorts, but not stained and the stench of alcohol seeping from my pores.
I've got my teetering down to a science my backpack, covered in Disney pins, looks like I stole it from a tween.

White Lady 1 lets me pass she put her LV bag down started to get neck pain from looking at me over her shoulder afraid I'd steal it empirical evidence would confirm her suspicions so I thank her, wait for white lady 2 in front to pay the White Lady Worker at the counter before I order a breakfast sandwich

White Lady 1 stands near her bag and describes the food in the case "It all looks fake, not in that good way,
I don't want anything from here." And I don't know who she's talking to, but she's still in line still deciding still shitting on the food.

White Lady Worker asks for my ID with my credit card, not looking if it was signed not asking White Lady 2 for the same and I show it

White Lady 1, “ugh, I’m going to eat here.” Seriously, who are you talking to, I think, and grab my suspicious order and turn to leave, as I pass, she circles her arm around her bag.

and I wonder if I’m going to taste the racism in the sausage or egg or maybe it’s baked into the bread but I know, really, like right now,
that even if I could taste it, know it, I’d second guess if it were actually there.

The Wonder Wheel

Harriet Shenkman

My plan was to escape over the Brooklyn Bridge, poverty not a badge, immigrant parents never an injustice.
I fled on the BMT line, a long braid down my back, sandals on my feet, to a narrow railroad flat, Greenwich Village, poetry and La Dolce Vita my desire.
My mother came to visit with a package of meat ground twice, frowned at the dampness of the rooms.
I did not budge.
My heart unsevered until a Southern boy with hazel eyes turned up.
He looked like Marcello Mastroianni and knew all the capitols of Africa.
On our first date, he listened to Thelonious Monk intently and three months later, I proposed and he said yes.
I rode back over the Brooklyn Bridge to my parents, where the sea air smelled like fish and the Wonder Wheel lit up the boardwalk.

INNER MONGOLIA

Eduard Schmidt-Zorner

Star-sprinkled, speckled sky dome over icy ground, snow dust covered.
Frozen rain clings to fir branches.
There is not a light or a sound only green veils of northern lights.
Snow flurry over grey mountains which have no paths and passes.

Horses graze on sediment pastures, scrape food with their hooves from under the snow layer.
Yaks give fat milk, patient animals.
Butter is beaten by tribal women in their yurts near the fire.
In iron pots mutton meat boils.
Soon the sun will lure the first sprouts.

Sacred stone heap with a pole, supplications on paper strips, a silk scarf flutters as sacrifice.
A shaman hums incantations.
Any sense of time disappears in meditation, a fearless beauty surrounds and nourishes me, whispers at treetops.

Snow melt with rising floods changes rivers' course.
Torrential currents transform and create new tundra images, re-paint the landscape on a grey canvas, in a steel frame of high clouds.
Eternal continuous change.

Off the Highway, a Road

Carolyn Adams

It's the kind of neighborhood that gets worse as it gets older.

The German smokehouse on the highway, with its fragrant cinders, runs out of money and closes down.

A playmate's father kills himself.
The boy finds him after school and is never the same.

The shy girl with the silent Slavic father gets "in trouble"(it's rumored she grows fat and round) and is sent away.

The rent house next door hosts a murder by way of a jealous ex-husband.

Cheap apartments go up across the road.
There's a crackhouse in the next block.

But this was once an old prairie.
It remembers itself that way.
Switchgrass, verbena, meadowlarks, bobwhites, winecups, wild onion.

And at the bayou, willows over the water, spider lilies in the shade.

WAVE
Mike Knowles

Hoard

Allan Lake

Immigrant mould breathes with ease on calendar from another millenium, skyscraper of cardboard boxes, full of who-knows-what. Roach habitat, forgotten momentos of motivation, bric-a-brac awaiting overdue glue, teacup of congealed duck fat, unopened box of Smarties in case a board game requires inspiration.
I visit classmate after decades away.
Lint-capped novels enclose lost plots, used shoes turned green, a gallon jug with orange plastic flower, rotting curtains, rotten sashes with cracked pane, bits of bluetac hold up nothing, an unmade bed, discard tissues wiped tears, snot, what-not.
My old classmate never left home.
Dinosaur TV here, smaller tv with rabbit ears there on soiled doily between grandma's ballet figurines that figured in clutter of things after she was sent to cemetery.
Why does he keep them?

Left-overs, all Mum's clothes, fur coat on the foot of bed, stuffed toys, tarnished jewelry in need of elbow grease or duck fat, missing buttons, missed opportunities. Symbol of a church, football team and times no worse but before this time, a rock-hard roll nibbled on one corner, package of mouse traps minus one that's somewhere embracing death, chipped dishes from one set intermarried to exotics from op shops, garage sales, landfill refuse that never got home.
Yes, We shall gather at the river.
Old newspapers in bound mound, a cache, a precaution against news shortage, set of dated encyclopedia atop bookcase, collecting dust on this treasure island where there's no wifi, no am or pm but a clock says 3:21 forever.

The Thai Daughter's Homecoming

Richard Oyama

I'm on the road to Soppong. A black man And a Dane escort me to the inn. The owner Feeds me cashew chicken. The younger daughter Makes an infant from a plastic strip, tucking her in.

These are stories children tell themselves.
My room is earth-toned. I wash and shave and Join the family around a fire-pit.
A pharmacy student who knew North Dakota Gives me grilled pork from a hibachi that looks Like a lemon juicer. The owner plies me with glasses of Boxed wine. They are curious. I talk pidgin, asking about luu and its rising tone and listen for Repetition and onomotopeia like same same not Unlike a rooster's bugle across a span of day.

At the highway's apron I see workers in conical hats Stooping to their labor. I know this in my blood. My Mother-ancestors were Hiroshima farmers. They Stooped to the backbreaking motion, hoeing, plucking A green bounty as dusk spilled gold over the tree-line.

A Morning Drive in Iceland

Alexandra Graffeo

In the morning, a dusty light settles across A flat plain of volcanic rock, mountains rising like Distant dragons marching against the horizon.
The sky reaches her hands, stretching out to Pull up the sun and end the long darkness. The rays of the sun, bright and strong, are harsh And unpleasant after the borealis dance of Night. Ice giants yawn out of a frozen lagoon To peek at their enemy, solar beams, and then Dive down to the depths of clear blue To await the ribbon-like lights of twilight.
Cars drive along the twisted, snow-covered roads Stopping to admire the churches built amongst Clusters of trees and shrubbery that dot the landscape, to let their passengers chase rainbows that arch out of waterfalls tumbling down sheer rock, and clusters of diamonds glitter on the black shores as the wind makes the sand tinkle like bells.

Columbia River

Carolyn Adams

SEASONS

Eduard Schmidt-Zorner

Short hot Siberian summer, lush, aromatic, wild and opulent, cranberries of the Tundra in abundance their bitter taste for a nomad's sustenance complimenting nut-tasting mushrooms.

A boat inches along the river shore slowly through the morning mist.
An open plain, riverside forest as home where reindeers whirl like a maelstrom to move from summer to winter pastures.

Dinner is waiting for the herders in the pointed yurts.
The feet are hurting, the bones.
After fat soup, curd and salted tea the herdsman dozes off into a dream.

October, snowfall, incessantly, ice wind, frozen landscape, threatening horizon, endless monochrome expanse, birds pecking the last fruit of the trees.

I stack firewood at the log cabin wall and close the door to meditate.
Soon ice lets everything solidify.
Trees as snapshots, rivers as still life, frozen in months-long persistence.

Whirly August.

Okpeta, Gideon Iching

Your visit was in August when the rain had gone on a recess to welcome her sisters with a dining apron around waist.

with the table set for a banquet-a dinner, a call came from the elders to depart suddenly in peace.
Then i remembered a crying dog cried 3-days ,7-times before the dawn in august.
For, in my tradition crying dogs signify death.

I watched them strangled life out of her, trying to help meant waging war with spirits, for women don't fight spirits, they submit willingly.
Father infested some dried tubers of yam on a paled looking day, in august, waited for a dead festival in his stomach.
Men with spirits, in blacks from the left heavens beckoned on her wandering corpse laying supine on a bier six feet below.

Light shaded, darkness shun like the last flames of a waxy candle.
This scene reminded me about her last words on a dying, dining table

"this life is a china cup brittle & beautiful & fragile & brief *today is only one day – with or without us there will be more”

---Paul Robert Mullen*

The sadness of trees is that they do not have the ability to move freely.

Brad Stumpf

But If I - a tree.
And You - a tree - across the street,
Our branches would reach, to find and tickle each other.
Our leaves would fall and blow, to form blankets That cover each others roots, And help each other grow.

Our roots would reach below, beneath the busy street, Cars Unknowingly driving over our tangled feet.

Could we see?
Do We need to see?

I have my fingers in your fingers and My toes in your toes.
My hair on your hips and yours on mine.

If I had eyes, they would be closed.

Two leaves

Roy Duffield

This is a true story
Of two leaves
Once upon a time
There were two leaves

Who in their prime Fell from the same tree
One at a time
Into the debris
Then blew together awhile
Down the same street.

One was big
And one was small Though to the autumn wind
They were equal.
So they grazed twig-to-twig All through the fall
As they blew in sync Alongside the same wall.

One caught a ride
On a stranger's boot While right alongside
The other leaf blew
As they danced in time Inseparable
And they blew through life As one and as two.

They turned yellow together Then purple, then red Birds of a feather Neither followed nor led Together forever

Neither thought nor said As they blew together Along the same riverbed.

One day one blew left
And the other blew right But they came together again As day became night
With a chill in the air And the fading light They blew as a pair Still side-by-side.

One blew in the pavement One blew in the road Yet never was it stated And never did they know They were never estranged And they were never alone As they blew the same way On down that same road.

They were caught
In a whirlwind, the muddle Of a storm
They lay to rest in a puddle And began losing their form.

Trodden into the same earth Baked under the same sun They disappeared from this world As one.

Yet as they lay there Neither one dreaming
Of to the wind again taking

Nor of how fleeting This coincidence of nature Without any meaning Nor explanation
Yet what a sweet thing!

That once upon a time
There were two leaves.
Who in their prime
Fell from the same tree
One at a time
Into the debris
Then blew together awhile
Down the same street.

A planet is dreaming

Cheryl Caesar

In the last battle, humans fire seeds for bullets: make compost for trees.

the loneliest tree in the world

Kate LaDew

the only tree for 250 miles in any direction, was killed by a drunk driver one night in the middle of the sahara so I, the second loneliest tree, on an island in New Zealand the only tree for 170 miles, moved up a spot, and I knew, to the minute, when I did, hearing the cry of the loneliest tree in the world when the carbon fiber of the drunk driver's fender smithereen-ed its trunk, chainsawed through the 300 rings of its middle and left it dying 250 miles away from anything that could understand all its pain bubbled up from the earth's core, spread through the mantle, the asthenosphere, the silicate crust split each spherical shell of the world until the pain ran up and down the roots of every tree that existed and might exist our collective agony making a sound so pure it echoed to the edge of everything, all the way to me, cycloning my leaves in a language I thought thought only I understood and this sudden knowledge of things like myself, of a world full of trees I would never see, of trees that once existed and existed no longer, nearly split me in two -- because I had known I was lonely, not that I was alone -- and when dendrologists came to New Zealand to crown me 'loneliest tree in the world,' they put their hands over a scar, new and unmapped, shaped like a bolt of lightning in the very center of me, where a heart would be.

Donald Wyman Crabapple

V. Jane Schneeloch

Let me keep my mind on what matters, which is my work, which is mostly standing still and learning to be astonished.
Mary Oliver

What matters about this tree?
This small tree next to a giant oak on a busy city street?
Perhaps the miracle of a bud emerging from a dead branch, or the fragile blossom that attracts the monarch, or the wonder of a child in a confetti of petals, or the comfort of cool shade offered to a stranger.
Or perhaps it is the reliable and persistent force that turns earth and rain and sun into tree?

Four Trees
Cynthia Yatchman

Ode to Balboa Park San Diego

Jenean McBrearty

You are beautiful, full of orchestral arias cascading down synapses.
The pungent aroma of eucalyptus and pepper trees hanging in the air over stucco facades of Spanish decoration.

Your eyes are beautiful, heavy with dreams that cannot be shared, shut away with the ghosts' silent footfalls in the corridors.

You lips are beautiful, smiling, whispering—echoing with hushed conversations of long white-dressed women because ladies were restrained then, and disciplined their children, walking slowly past art and artifacts displayed for the curious staring with wonder.

Decades-old palms wave greetings and goodbyes to passers-by—children, sailors, and day-camp kids, gaze at El Cid astride his bulging horse presiding over cherished remnants of the fair exposition.

We live where our hearts reside, and mine resides within you, beside the lily pond where we are forever full of grace.
If San Andreas ever reclaims the earth, or contractors rearrange the horizon; if steel and glass carpet the cityscape, let this remain.
For I live here though I am far away in a place called old, old age.

Carry your sadness well

Obinna Chilekezi

Sunday was an eclipse
The darkness overcome the beauty of a day I saw you boil like a volcano Unstoppable, the lava purges on and on

I have seen ecstasy of love shine And bitterness of hatred groom in you Just like the petal fades from the hibiscus And the heart spread venom as smile

Come off it, this should be another day of love As the clouds cannot withhold the rainfall for too long

See the mash, the frozen music of dawn And the sun spreads the day with laughter

You cannot stand there all alone, along with sadness Come up now join the world to smile Each a person, with a burden to carry And yours not an exception to be.

EVEN THE STARS HAVE THEIR OPINIONS

R.T. Castleberry

Sunday dusk closes-- worship decided, curfew declared.
Refining the guardian task, I'm counting the stranded, the derelict walking in the road.
Headache in the afternoon, today is another death march-- wartime rain falls, children cry by the river.
Walking above blistered streets, the air stinks of lamentation.
A friend has made a business of cutting bodies from corpse ropes.
Figures argue in my dreams, fight over angel status, anti-depressants, the worth of forgiveness.
Like Brando in Last Tango, lunging between wastage and the invalid, I'm seething with weariness.
Never an emptier day, there is a ravening, an unraveling.
Returning to the charity table, I'm waiting for revival, none nearing my gazing eyes.

same time next week

Luke Carmichael Valmadrid sunday nights at my place are like Satan sighing with the Seraphim, seeing similarities on the same side of sobriety, sedatives sans surnames, nothing light enough to supersede the setting sun, so all the dark liquids might as well be holy water, because you still go to church after college, and I realized that praying doesn't help.

sometimes we talk. at length about old friends, at width about new friends, at depth only when we're weak enough to admit where our strength comes from.

sometimes we just sit. you on the couch, me at the kitchen counter, as if changes in position should imply change, the clouds trick us into thinking that the stars aren't always out. you turn towards the night sky, and I borrow a glance, the back of your head casts a shadow on the glass so that I can see the dark side of the moonshine, somehow that suggestion of your silhouette still spins shadows into shining shards of soul that I try to scry with and fail.

I don't remember when I stopped walking you to the door. but I did. sometimes you come in sandals so it's clear that you shouldn't take as long as you do to leave again. sitting in the dark, I hear my name and flimsy monday lunch plans in your voice--it's like you can't stop the trumpets of the heavenly host from sounding and I can't help but play along

at least until the door shuts when you close it until the lock clicks when I turn it and suddenly we both feel full responsibility for the mess we've made

HOW THINGS ARE THESE DAYS

Michael Angelo Stephens

There are so many hours in the day, so Many words in my head, then comes silence, The black hole of memory, going down Some empty highway in a beat-up car, Listening to the only station on The radio, some endless right-wing talk Show, praising the plucky billionaires and Oligarchs in their fight against the left And the environmentalists, and some Old guy calls in to testify to the Show's truth, whatever the hell he means by Such a remark out here in the middle Of the desert in the high heat of day, And it all gets inside of me like a Virus or the plague, almost like a song You hate, but which you can't get out of your Head all day and into the night, driving And driving as you hum along to it.

Cherubs

Theresa C. Gaynord

There's abandonment in the night tonight. When fortunes are spent and love is absorbed into the atmosphere in an attempt to heal and engage. Cherubs are our little helpers and like detached spirits of the dead they coat our senses and feed our souls with discretion, touching, silent, like the quizzical frown of a pallet adjusting to coconut milk broth with tomatoes, cabbage, galangal, lemongrass and cilantro. It may take us mere mortals a few minutes to see daylight, but we savor in the advantages of it when we do.

this moment

Mark A. Fisher

I will saunter down a cemetery road gleamed with frost as a 22° halo plays hula hoop with the moon teasing the coming winter my footsteps beating Jazz across the gravel as graveyard angels sway in icy darkness moonlight limned and waiting glorified knowing no other has experienced this moment
with infinity too big to echo

Knowing God

Goodness Olanrewaju Ayoola

I

Begins with self-acknowledgement as a body Of woes: a leaf paled by the other side of sunlight;
A leaf hung between gravity in the belly of a crazy storm.

II

I repeat a verse until I levitate and kiss the Elbow of God. I conclude Liturgies with a bangle of emphasis.
I anticipate God's stimulus by stressed importunity.

III

The greatest creation of God is darkness.
The way it pushes us right back to him/ the way It pulls us from him. And we are not unaware When we tear hell over heaven.

IV

I stand unclad in front of a mirror. It is the dumbest way to think I can draw God face close. I see just member. A man torn Between desires: a woman's core and strong incense of mints. I still don't Know which part of my tripartite takes after God.

V

I want to be all fun and frolic in your presence. Boogie down.
God says, I am not an experience.

I am existence existent. Quiet your soul, tranquil quietness or you are On your way to hell.

Addendum: God is a bottomless oxymoron.

Ode to a God

Lukpata Lomba Joseph

Kudi is the pen-name of a god, a ramp somewhere between a revving automobile and the exfoliating skin of a corroded Peugeot.

In my room, I gawk at my neighbour through rimed window glasses glistened by white light, she lopes along the street, pushing her body against the hush of the witching hour, holding fast to her breast in a tray. She lopes down Macaulay Street until, she is swallowed by darkness.

Kudi is a good reason that lounges in the lacuna set up between her knees and the edge of her skirt.

In the garden, mum's waffle with God goes sour, mum wrestles with her body to please God.

Mum thinks of a pill prescribed at the chapel,

you don't go to God empty-handed.

Kudi is God's only reason for resisting prayers, mum has to fight to walk her way through God.

Kudi is a shrill sound, somewhere between a becke and a hail, a hurray and a bullshit, a wotcha and a son of a bitch.

In the room, my lover lifts her body and flaunts her enamel.

In the dark, my lover laughs, she will not stop smiling, she bumbles, only grows fluent at you are funny.

Last night her face faded into a harmattan nightmare, today my lover parades the bluish whiteness on her enamel.

Kudi is a pen-name. Kudi is a delicate revelation of the silver in my lover's teeth.

Note: Kudi is a Hausa word for money.

Denominations

Gale Acuff

I guess when I'm dead I'll be in Heaven or Hell, maybe it depends on what church you attend, at ours I have to believe in Jesus and try not to sin and try to be good and with a little luck, grace that is, I go to Heaven when I croak but at the church catty-corner to ours you don't have to believe at all, you're saved already, you go to Heaven because Jesus didn't die in vain and died for everybody so after Sunday School today I told Miss Hooker I'm changing churches if my parents sign off but she started to cry. Maybe love is like this.

The Seas of You

Karlo Sevilla

I see a flotilla of white sails on the surface of your teardrop, and pastel-colored submarines stealthy underneath.
Your drops of sweat?
I don't see them;
I feel them en masse when my arms are octopus tentacles wrapped around you.
Then, when you lie prone afterwards, the wet strands of your black hair scattered on your brown nape lie as eels and sea serpents gasping their last upon newly dried-up ocean bed.

Rising

Rhiannon Grant

the water appears on the hillside under moss and bracken creeps from damp rocks sneaks into the stone-walled pool built by hands this quiet simple square takes our warts, our feet, refreshingly can still be fouled or blocked one flow is fought by fear the jug feels unworthy the jug worries about offending another turns it away in waste the cup is already full the cup dislikes the flavour I can drink or go thirsty but the water will run anyway: river, sea, rain, stone, spring.

The edge

Rajendra Shepherd

Swallowed up we merge,
The timid touch stirring,
Swirling plumes of love,
Upward from silt and mud,
To kiss the sunny surface,
To feel thrashing life.

Through her we wade,
Feet skimming rocks,
Skin blushed by need,
To feel the ocean's need,
Of depths unreached,
Eyes alive with fire.

Rolling waves crash,
Give way to tumbling force,
Bubbling sea foam,
That carries us,
Away to cool depths,
Where silence echoes.

Far from shore we are lost,
In bliss until the current,
Comes again,
The swell repeating,
'Come home' it calls,
Its refrain alive and tempting.

The Scent of the Sea

Marc Frazier

Imagine a begonia, an artichoke, the breath of an iron lung,
The moment you believe in solace to smoothe yourself.
Today you walk the steep cliffs where hikers Trode the paths of slow generations; to us, Memory is the lack of regret or an absence of want.
But a step is risky: a riptide in the wrinkle of time.
A forgotten insult, an amulet, a scattering of crows.
Because a melody I hum this morning has cinders and sparks, A blue flame of inspiration to echo, an element undiscovered.
But I discover nonetheless, a gem polished between the unfinished prelude for cellos
And the hope that in heaven, for instance, a boulevard welcomes heretics Like desert its just-in-time shower.

Think About it Cousin

John C. Krieg

Think about it cousin
That place where we grew up The hills, the river, the fields Those narrow maple-lined streets In that sleepy little town They are us, and we are it That's who we are...that's who we are

Think about it cousin
That Catholic religion Poured over us
Like water-boarding
We were given the injection before We even knew what hit us

Think about it cousin
Those stories of the old days Ridiculing us for how good we had it While during the (Great) Depression They ate beavers and raccoons and carp And had to marry their daughters off young

Think about it cousin
That white Cape Cod house overlooking the river And us eventually claiming separate bedrooms For our privacy, and so that we could beat off That was the ejaculation of our youth We were separated, yet somehow joined at the hip

Think about it cousin With only rare exceptions we hardly ever went anywhere away from that sleepy little town And then we went off to college, and only on rare exceptions ever came back home

Think about it cousin
We are the progeny of a hardworking factory worker and a hard working grocery store clerk Who only wanted the best for us through the sweat of their brows, and the calluses on their hands Those times now faded to faint warm memories That's who we are...that's who we are

Memory

Yong Takahashi

memory is the fiction we create to survive smiling, waxing poetic convincing ourselves more than others lies becoming truth as time passes, our version becomes fractured memories, speedbumps on our road to fantasy land a jarring stop, jumbling our insides, our minds scrambling, racing, avoiding the road home fades as I lose my way once more through a self-inflicted maze

This is What We Never Notice During the Day

Martin Willitts Jr

There is a slight weight to the change from dark when light whirlpools into day.

A white lily flares open, shifts slightly like a lace curtain tussled by a slight breeze.

I'm carried digging in the brown-ochre ground.
The odor of lush, rich earthiness permeates the air.

The lily opens its cello solo, saturating my bones with shapeless and tangible touches.

I want more of that briefness, again, again, that aliveness, that return of the sensual, arriving like reams of love letters. This passing thrill never lasts, and I'm uncertain what to do — to hold on or let go of this temporary thrill, hoping I will feel it again. We live in this charmed life, a life that flips through the pages of experience to get to the good parts. We want to underline those parts, dog-ear that section, go back, savor it.

But some other experience tugs for our attention, insisting it is time to go. It is late, day is flaming out, light simply moves ahead too fast.

Mendelssohn writes a violin concerto

Esther Sun

and stows it away for the winter, waiting for it to germinate. Days later, I open the drawer to find the cloud-outline of a girl who undoes the work that brought me here. Someone who warrants it.

Our lady of the in-between braids the cadenza into her hair. Heartwood of last year's vacancy and this year's awakening, pithed ceiling of my brain.

She snatches the light out of street lamps and binds up

Herr Mendelssohn's music into one thousand gifts of unknowledge, a thousand refractions of song.

Our bride of the unbecoming spins the music into a prism on the tip of her tongue. Every few pages the shoulder rest dislocates from the curve of the violin's hips, but sliding it back is not a problem for the resolved, those who hunger for their own portions of light.

Reading Lips

Stephen Mead

If born unto silence, where Beethoven suffered will there really be no sound there or is it just some other frequency, undetectable, fine?

Listen, feel. Don't say a thing.
Hear touch breathing music, water oozing, soothing, letting down defenses.

Or does it?

The element moves, pretending a wall, impenetrable, mute. Yet, wires intensify, energy is strung: a kind of tungsten swimming afire with the core soft & warm.

Come close, explore, sculpt, a Michelangelo unaware of rare talent, a fortress traced, then all stones, barriers broken as if language were tangible, a sphere only trust, instinct, in the dark, reading lips, keys unspeakable, could share, understand what song this matter means.

Life's a soap on my television screen

Naima Rashid

As I watch my city bleed on the television screen, I feel a new-age, digital-like sorrow; lukewarm, enough to flatter the conscience, but not to trouble the mind, enough to tug at the heartstrings, but not to cause any pain.

The balancing is tricky, so I keep the vista of my vision cluttered with distractions and playthings - coke cans and ketchup, pizza and pearls, souvenirs from blindfolded travels, Eiffel Towers in plaster of Paris, Chinese vases made in Taiwan.

I hop from black to white, obliterate the gray, I appropriate the knowledge according to my mood;
a bit of bloodshed, a bit of jazz, some song and dance, some war and peace, one way, it gets too much, too dark for a sunshine bloke like me.

The world's a stage, and life's a soap on my television screen, the drama folds and unfolds, and all I do is behold while my conscience is doped; it's vaudeville with human puppets, a little crude at times.
I can handle it pretty well though, I just need my shot, between murders and musicals, zapping in and out at will.

a brighter phoenix

Linda M. Crate

i am not your damsel was born one dark night only moonlight to guide me with a song of stars as my crown of flowers, you wanted a girl of softer petals;
but sometimes i am sharp as the angles of angry thorns—you didn't want this war bird wanted a chickadee to sing softly to you and tell you all the pretty lies you wanted to believe to be truths, but i am the ocean roaring with hurricanes ready to devour;
i am the flames of a forest fire untamed—not a queen whose kingdom you could steal or destroy and that scared you because when you killed me i looked you in the eye, and i told you were wrong; i rose up from the ashes of your chaos reformed with flames brighter than any universe you'll ever know.

Only the Flares Remained

Daniel Edward Moore

For Roscoe

When trauma left us parched & cracked, sharpening its teeth on a puppy's bones, we sewed his elegy into our skin, like porcupine prayers Grandma painted on crosses by the side of the road.

Making our mouths into flickering votives, bright with a moth's need for heat, we'd never been this cold in July, never seen the sky exploding at dusk with so much need for rescue.

The last thing we saw was the moon weeping for the pointless ends of us-two silver arrows, dull beyond shine, bouncing like hearts off the night.

Flaming Champagne

Daniel Edward Moore

It's not the longing, more the linger after Life's drunk chauffeur doesn't make the death row curve & cell after cell of minutes moan for someone's skin to make memories with. I was tired of feasting on cigarette butts pretending they were shrimp. To be 8 on desperate's scale of 10 I chose to lighten the afternoon up, watching the Hindenburg's slow-motion burn in black & white bondage to a New Jersey sky.
Sometimes it's the high that won't let you leave. Sometimes its flaming champagne.

When

Mandira Pattnaik

the stunned silence of the street across your home, gnaws at you --- you, who loves her space, loves the numb liveness in her bedroom --- shudder, ask for nothing but a rough desk frayed at the edges to pin her thoughts down.

you sit, preserving, persevering, waiting for another noon when the street will shake itself back to life, and long for a fistful of that thrum to resonate across your hemisphere, you imagine a bustle, and feel alive again.

solitude is so plentiful, the landscape so unchanging, you call someone you severed out of your life and rejoice when he says, he's watching birds! You find a pair on your window sill too; you listen to their shrill voices --- growing and celebratory --- of ginormous conquests.

Blue feathers.

DS Maolalai

breaking our cover like rabbits out of bullrushes, the car exits dublin and springs forward north. it's going to be somebody's birthday and this is march, so early in the year that things are still shining. sat in the back seat, we trade winebottles and hand about sandwiches while ciaran drives, quietly, annoyed he isn't drinking. to our left lambs jump, tumble with summer in their bones and on the right cars motor past a river sparkling joy. we are going to donegal – a five hour drive if we're lucky. stopping at the northern border to get more sandwiches and so everyone but ciaran can piss. life is chasing behind us, the country beautiful, the sky a blue crabshell, a blue rock, blue feathers
falling out of blue birds.

ROBERT'S GUILT

John Brugaletta

I watched the chickadee munch on some seed, then it exploded in a cloud of down.
The hawk flew it away with ease to where her chicks lay snuggled in a nesting box that I had nailed together last springtime for birds that size and for their future broods.

I had not thought a hawk would settle in, but settle in it did, and now I must find some way to relieve this nagging guilt.

Samhain

Theresa C. Gaynord

Energy flows, shifting inward, watching me work with calm silence; fusing action with tremendous power. There's a terrible physical presence shattering the veil between this world and the next. I feel its direct impact on me. My thoughts are scattering everywhere, electric flashes, I'm blacking out; there are missing pieces to my conversations, responses I can't recall. It's the summer's end, the beginning of a Celtic year, Samhain, the doorway to the sanctum sanctorum. The ritual; some are afraid, but the bonfire comes to burn away the strifes of old, a kind gesture from the horned god himself among the symptoms and consequences of imbalance. The hour is intense and I'm focused as insight comes pulsating rhythmically from his hands to mine. There is static in the force at first before it stabilizes. We are sky clad, nonsexual in a loving manner among the offerings, the altar. There's another lifetime I remember; the absorption of all colors.

Black, in all its transition, awaits me, removing all my characteristics, all my talents in a spiral, a labyrinth prior to death. There's a significant change in time, temperature as I walk the edge of the woods, awake with my mind, connecting with nature. Through this trial run I see the complexities of a life, reevaluated, refined and reset. Potentially dangerous and destructive are the civilized sounds that do not encourage trust in the subconscious. The left hand path has a strong and positive response, as does the right hand path.

I see paradise in darkness, people laugh, sparrows fly, little boys and girls dance, even those broken or sold or given away. There is sanctuary in the garden of rotting flesh and bone. Love songs that tear your soul apart, blood-dripping note after note.
I see those I touch, those I love, breathe into me, cold lips exuding warmth. Orange leaves, blossoms of liquid red gold; grow, ascend. Morning smells are nestled high within apple trees; what falls away is near as we awaken only to sleep once again.

Separation Retold

Esther Sun

In Honfleur, spring sun works its way through the flesh of the sky. Sailboats, tired wayfarers, moor atop the harbor's steel-capped waters.

They sleep as if never expected to leave again.
By the water, an empty carousel turns. Strange how after centuries of longing, the cobblestone pavement now refuses the feet that walk it. That ache to expel the dépaysement from their ankles and soles. Here, even the seagulls lift their voices in prayer. Where are you from? they caw to me after their splintered Amen. What home do you belong to? As if home were a cellophane bag of toffees waiting to be unwrapped. As if home could be picked up and swallowed cleanly in one bite.

And yet home has never felt so real as it does now when I am away. I want to respond: A Father who is preparing a place for me among many rooms in his house of unchiseled light. But here, the parchment sky does not spell deliverance in its grid of clouds.

Instead: foreignness. Basswood lamb and lion rooted side-by-side on the carousel, the animal king's jaw hanging open. A mouth bitter from slumber.

What's Mine

Julia Rubin

someone has pressed a thumb into the sky and it's all purple, veiny, unstable air mass. i hold my breath. i think we hold our breath. wind skins our cheeks. i watch the earth pulse. i think we watch the earth pulse. turn wild. boom and spit. send sonic shocks down my spine, our spines, i think. supercells across my hairline. my skin is buzzing, the world is weeping in the way it loves to do. i am weeping, we are weeping, the world and i. you say did i tell you my mom thinks you're intense? when the sky clears, which parts of us do i get to keep? i stick a post -it note on thunderstorms and call them mine.

Fall Thunder (V2)

Michael Lee Johnson

There is power in the thunder tonight, kettledrums.
There is thunder in this power, the powder blends white lightening flour sifters in masks toss it around.
Rain plunges October night; dancers crisscross night sky in white gowns.
Tumble, turning, swirl the night away, around, leaves tape-record over, over, then, pound, pound repeat falling to the ground.
Halloween falls to the children's knees and imaginations.
Kettledrums.

Researching

Stephen Page

Each page I turn gets me closer “The Light in here is making me blind!”

I am at the entrance to a cave that goes down deep into the earth. It is layered with autumn colored leaves, pieces of Styrofoam, and discarded furniture. I feel the presence of large rabid raccoons, or maybe bears. I turn to run but cannot move. My feet and calves are planted in the earth—they have become roots. I can smell the richness of the deep dark dirt, and feel the crawling of little pink worms. The leaves are now decomposing all around me. My left hand slides across the outside wall of the cave, but the wall turns out to be a smooth, cool, green cemented surface of a garage. I look over my left shoulder and see behind me a huge spider web that has captured leaves and flies and brightly colored toy cars. On the other side of the web is a house. It is gray and white and trimmed in black, with flecks of peeling yellow. A dark figure stands in the shadows of the porch, holding the screen door open.

Up from the deep

Robert Grew

Up from that dark and mysterious region.
Out from the canyons of an unchanging sea.
Oh, listen to the echoes of songs past comprehension.
Hear a language peculiar and a strange melody.
From the dragging of nets which devastate vast acres.
Flagrant dumping of poisons polluting the seas.
Oh, listen to the tears, touch the sobbing of silence of giants 'neath the swells, feel their soft plaintiff pleas.
Like the Sea of Sargasso, surface-skin, oh so silent filled with thick floating flotsam, as if frozen-still.
In that denseness, as sunlight, filters and fails flies the bird that the dragnets would kill.
Out from that refuge in the deepest of oceans.
Through waves phosphorescent, in tumultuous cry.
Please listen to the voiceless who inhabit the deepness.
Lord, come to their rescue lest all of them die.

The edge

Rajendra Shepherd

Swallowed up we merge,
The timid touch stirring,
Swirling plumes of love,
Upward from silt and mud,
To kiss the sunny surface,
To feel thrashing life.

Through her we wade,
Feet skimming rocks,
Skin blushed by need,
To feel the ocean's need,
Of depths unreached,
Eyes alive with fire.

Rolling waves crash,
Give way to tumbling force,
Bubbling sea foam,
That carries us,
Away to cool depths,
Where silence echoes.

Far from shore we are lost,
In bliss until the current,
Comes again,
The swell repeating,
'Come home' it calls,
Its refrain alive and tempting.

The Secret Wounds Show

William Doeski

Today, the secret wounds show.
Even in the boldest sunlight they phosphoresce in colors no artist has ever attempted.

The men building the new bridge smolder under their hardhats, their domestic issues sparking like runaway welding equipment.

The women shopping for groceries, masked against the latest virus, glow with surgical-looking scars plastered all over their bodies.

My own wounds look like a map of Indonesia, mass of islands distinct from each other but linked beneath the friendly sea.

Your wounds look aggressive and contoured to cling like moss.
Some are larger than I'd suspected, still weeping cosmic fluids no physician could identify.

Others are pinpricks endured for the sake of enduring, scabs of moments of shameful excess.

If you also can see this damage through the usual psychic mist please speak up and ease me of my guilt. The hot light pours from a single vast perspective, possibly to single me out—everyone's wounds re-opening only to swallow me whole.

Drowning

Bill Stifler

The summer I almost drowned I was so thin my body slipped into the water with scarcely a ripple.

Only moments before my long, steady strokes had convinced us all I could reach the other side.

My body swung upright, unable to move the few feet toward shore and soft green grass.

Twenty-one years later, on a cruise full of good intentions, on a sea made choppy by hurricane winds, surrounded by lifeguards and wearing a life vest, I panicked. Shivering, embarrassed, ashamed,

I begged her to leave me, to join the others,
as I swallowed misery.
Nothing like the calm

I felt that earlier day Sinking into brown, still water, baptized—drowned and resurrected.

how i explained suicide to my boss's dog

Stephanie Hauer

hello sweetheart!
i know mom's been real busy recently so she's letting me come visit you for a while! i don't know if she's told you yet but something real bad has happened.

do you understand?
can you know what suicide is?

can it get between those fuzzy little ears of yours that sometimes humans feel so sad and so desperate and so broken that they think killing themselves is their best option?

can your little chest tighten like the lungs of someone who feels that they do not deserve the oxygen entering their body with every breath?

you know how to play dead.
can you comprehend that some people don't feel like playing anymore? that they close their finger guns around metal ones and they don't keep subtly wagging their tails when they fall?

would your ears prick up the way they do at interesting sounds if you heard the scream of someone who had the image of dangling, once-twitching feet burned into their retinas when they found their friend hanging in a bathroom?

do you feel it when you walk out the door to go pee in the quad - that hovering, heavy air filled with grief, shock, and fear?

can you smell how the campus has changed when your wiggling nose sniffs the air? is that powerful nose of yours able to tell that there is one less student here?

so please be patient with us humans. i know you miss your mom. but someone is missing their resident, their roommate, their friend.
someone is missing their son, their brother, their lover. someone is missing their almost.
and your mom is helping them deal with the mourning we all are.

so while you whimper at the door and wonder when mom will come home, don't worry - she will come back but sometimes not everyone does.

That Night Among the Reeds

Anita Kestin

That night among the reeds, someone held me back, pressed down upon my lips and whispered “Hush.” Only the wind, you thought, wind whistling without form, blowing deep inside a hollow reed, blowing at nothing, blowing through.
But it wasn’t.

Now that you return to your life, I to mine, there is a secret that only the wind and I share and you do not.

And all you took from that night was the smell of nearby sea, a touch of skin in the silky wind: that was (you thought) only flowing through, blowing at nothing,
blowing deep inside a hollow reed.

Trigger Warning

Antara

I have been trying to forget you/But all my poems come out as trigger warnings/each one more severe than the last/Trying to cover up the gun shots that pepper my chest/storms that prowl beneath my skin/screams that burn up my throat/How much blood does it take to taint the ocean red/that is the amount of pain that I have felt/And now you are a water-mark on my soul/permanently there/but not quite shown/If I were wounded then these poems would be the colour of the blood I bleed/but instead all my wounds look like tattoos on my body/brands behind my eyes/And these poems/they are shrieking sirens/unfading aches/unending pain/In vicious remembrance of your body on mine/whispers in my ear/love in my heart/imprint on my soul/I could try to forget you/But these poems/they come out as hymns to a longing that masks itself as pain/that feels like shrapnel digging into my chest/
And my body/it has become a shrine to you/where your memories pay homage to tremors that slither up my spine/every night/
If I manage to forget you/these trigger warnings will still remain/reminding me of bitter tasting ache/My soul will still whisper your name/pain will still paint me insane/

Consent

Caitlin Upshall

Consent, I have learned is a shy creature with a habit of being buried under apologetic ambiguity in dark rooms.

She does not like strangers or loud noises or silence.

I have spent so much time comforting my consent as she weeps into the morning that I recognize how she breathes when she is frightened.

When I left you, I told her it was safe to come out and made hot chocolate while she hid beneath blankets.

Now when I eat

Caitlin Upshall

I poke my rolls and wiggle my belly laugh at the curves | pretend I am a mountain
 strong | unbreakable | tall on my kitchen stool | reach to the highest shelf grab a snack or two and cradle food in one arm | while whispering, “I love you and thank you” | honestly

WHY THAT PARTICULAR DRESS

Juanita Rey

The dress I will wear when someone asks me to hangs in my closet between a couple of bland work outfits.

It is thin and summery, blue and brown like sky and skin, light around the knees, and bodice-tight in the breast.

I've tried it on and I do not look lovely enough.
But when someone says, “what about that one.”
I promise I will.

Correlation Between Fatigues And A Simple Cotton Dress

Mandira Pattnaik

I scoop two pink palms like petals in the cups of my hands, smell the delicate floral fragrance of powder you just dusted on our seven pounds of flesh after nine months of expectancy. You frame my scruffy face etched with the load of machine guns and tightly-wound vision of dying mates, on a desert spell seven months stretched. It melts into shades of longing until we're fused in a cowrie shell, and gurgle the night with doubts. At dawn we bead hopes of a distant togetherness.

On a funereal day drenched with soundless lament of another adieu, I see your hands having agency as you knead the dough, the last before one more surrender to our hyphenated lives. My fatigues imagine your wait for fantasies to crowd around a simple floor-length cotton dress.

Electric City
Carolyn Adams

Letter to My Mother, From Quarantine

Sherre Vernon

Mom. Mama. Dear Mom: Your voice on the phone yesterday was too much. I don't know if it was the acoustics of the rehab center, the scratch of the mic against your face and the blankets, or just the way weeping has of fucking up technology. I wanted to say—did say, really—that yes, I understand it's lonely in there and that the ache for fresh air when you have no windows, is real—or that it would be if you meant anything other than cigarettes when you say fresh air. It's been well-on 20 years and here I am again trying to tell you that you need to show up for my brother, that he needs a mother and for some godforsaken reason, that's you. I have told you this in poems, in cataclysmic yelling matches, in the labor of my twenties that, at least, left him alive. What do you know of taking someone in, someone teetering on hope's sloping ledge? But there's a forgiveness when that someone is an adolescent with skin pock-marked and scarred. There's a tremble and a terror when it's a woman fully grown who refuses to hold even herself accountable. Do you know what it's like to breathe through you, how even the smallest inconveniences are grown green and large with fear? How I can't hear anyone's excuse for neglect without filtering it through your smoker's rasp and grasping laugh? I try to remember the warm bits: dresses fitted to me, summer-baked cookies, the one time you left work early to take me to the doctor. But I'm telling you, it's a fight just to believe in love's small possibility. So when my brother asks you to finish your treatment, to wait until the end of the week before checking yourself out of a quarantine bed and rolling up on his doorstep unannounced, what he's really saying is: Mom, let me make space in my heart for you. And Mom—rushing love, for your own convenience, never works. I would call you and tell you all of this today, but I am too held-breath on this harp-slanting possibility: that you might—by some act of god or nature or rock-fucking-bottom reach for us and I just can't—not today—I just can't hear you puff your excuses like so much smoke through the cell towers. I need even for a moment for that box to stay closed, for the cat—and by cat I mean love—to be asleep and not dead. Mom, please don't call. We are all safe here in California, and that's enough for now. —S.

Blockade

Quarantine Poem #8

Anne Fricke

my body leans against the wall in defeat tears race down my face, eager to reach the floor before my crumpled body I bow—head to knees—in prayer, in grief, in heart breaking sobs that call for the comfort of any god who would hear me

My daughter's voice pulls me from this image as we sit at the table practicing the sum of two parts and I revel, longingly, for a moment on the release these tears would bring me later, I lean in to the hot water pelting my skin, scrunch my eyes to force the desperate tears, but in this quiet space of civilized comfort they do not come these tears are building walls inside my body forcing my grief and fear to shelter in place, Why, when I call, do they not come running?

Instead, wait in the shadows of their blockade, try to force their way through while my daughter sings her class's morning circle song, alone

Medical Leave

Kristin LaFollette

For weeks I kept the back of my hand to my forehead to remember the heat of fever and thought I have a biology degree, I should know where the spleen is located or at least what it does but it wasn't until the swelling with white cells and lymph absorbed from the body that I realized we are all in danger of rupturing even if we don't take the stairs or carry boxes weighing more than ten pounds or participate in "contact" sports and really, rage and disappointment are the ways we flush our bodies of the things that make us ill and for weeks I could feel the warm tiredness of so much edema, a pain felt in the molars and the bottoms of feet but I accepted the sleep because fire is sometimes necessary to rid the ground of the things that threaten to decimate it

Frances Spurrier

POEM TO MY HANDS

Juanita Rey

I rinse my hands under the tap like I rinse fruit before I eat them.
I'm amazed how tender they can be, my tales of touch in ten fingers from a grandmother's cheek to the dimples in a lover's back.

And yet they've unscrewed the toughest of jar lids, have scrubbed dirty dishes in a restaurant until the brown ran almost red.

They're the only hands I'll ever have,
a catalogue of my fondling, grabbing, pushing, clapping, brushing and breaking.

And they have been held many times.
By other hands with a history of their own.

Today my heart rests in your palm as a peach freshly bitten

Brad Stumpf

Oozing down your arm, to your elbow and dripping, On your toes, in hopes of touching everything it can.
Hoping to be chosen,
To enter your bloodstream and influence your thoughts, To nourish your body
From the inside.

This peach is not me.
Not I,
A dirty old man trapped in a child's body,
And vice versa.

This peach is my heart in a cage with a view, of you, My chosen eater covered in juice.

Lemonade. No Ice

Sandy Deutscher Green

No chilled lemonade sipping tartly sweet drink slipping smoothly down the throat no tingling vagus nerve interrupting heart blips thrumming irritable stomping mad silently brooding no ice cooling the drink shocking the heart fluttering butterfly-staccato coughing internal slap

now yoga breath fills lungs body cavities between organs expand tendons loosen Unhinge

squeeze yellow lemon steady drip into glass tap tap lukewarm drinks eventually thirst slackens even pulse evens.

The Pain from my Childhood

Stephen Page

I extract you from the crisper and settle you in the palm of my hand, observing you. You are spherical so your outline is that of a circle, a shape that always begins again where it ends. I hold you up to the ceiling lamp and you disk opaquely like a moon eclipsing a sun. I cup you with both of my hands. You are cold. I close my eyes and with the tips of my fingers feel the waxy smooth, dimpled texture of your skin, caressing you, squeezing you. I place you on the window sill and note color spectrum within white light of midday sun absorbs space you inhabit; except coalescence that creates orange, that being sharply reflected away, striking the retina of my eye, where it meres to grand electrical messages that channel into my hippocampus imploding out to cortex. I smash you with my fist and juice from inside your body sprays onto the window, the sill, the floor, my shirt. Pulp sticks to the window. I dig my fingers into your split side and tear you open, smelling the sweet of your breath. I mark translucent membraned cells that once clung your guts together. I set your broken body back upon the sill and hammer my fist upon you again, and again, and; until you are nothing more than a wet flat mass lying in a puddle of your blood. I lip the kitchen trash can under you and scrape you into the smelly black bag, right on top of yesterday's potato peelings and this morning's coffee grounds. I lay a newspaper over you. I wipe the sill, window, and floor, removing what remains that would remind me that you ever were. I wash the stickiness off my hands and arms. I remove my shirt and toss it in the clothes hamper, shutting the lid slowly, watching as it gets darker and darker inside.

Isotopes

Sudhanshu Chopra

Does a perch view a bird's clasp as a lobe that hangs lightly? The first time I drank a kombucha tea was when I thought it was a cold one, and had almost flung sourdough bread in water because it looked like a block of wood. Before we understand the molecules that compose the world, the trick concealed beneath their randomness, have we already decayed by a half-life of exponential order?

Do we prefer cereal over sandwiches for the breakfast then would be trapped in a bowl? At most, a drop of milk would dangle from our lip which of course we can lick off.

We wouldn't need to hold the food between fingers, or wash our hands off of oil and ketchup after finding that an old, starving dog has sneaked in from the neighbour's broken door onto our terrace. We'd simply have to climb the stairs and chase him back into the street like a hot pea rolling out of a bread-crack.

CABIN FOOD

Karla Huston

We talked endlessly of it, recipes, cookies, chocolate, heavenly and thick. It was the taste, first explosions on the tongue. And texture, it was always texture with us.
Whorl of lip print on a glass, silk of cream.

We were driven by food, controlled by our bellies, empty all the time.
We thought food; we breathed it.

Tater Tot casserole made healthy with asparagus and onion and egg, a sticky stretch of cheese.
Add a bowl of green reedy melon, cinnamon dusted on the purple eyes of blueberries.

My Daughter Hates Basil

Liz Whiteacre

You wrinkle your nose at leaves on my pizza, and I know why the flesh browned by fire makes you eye-roll when I offer a slice. I would not have touched the stuff in middle school either. But I'm ever hopeful that chewing it will bring back memories of your feet bare in garden rows, picking leaves before the plants bolted, laughing as bees flirted with flowers in late evening. Basil's scent on fingertips. Basket filled before neighborhood dogs howled for dinner and fireflies danced in the lawn. What I want you to know is that taste buds change: sweet to bitter— fat to lean. That these harvests can sustain us long after winter.

a new england winter

Stephanie Hauer

the thieving wind creeps into my nostrils, leaving instant icicles of snot in its wake.

it stabs itself down my throat and confiscates the contents of my stomach, yanking gastric acid into my esophagus with frigid tendrils of icy intent.

this cold is so pervasive, my body revolts from exposure.
i forget how to breathe, how to swallow,
how to blink.

even when wrapped in every layer that my closet has to offer, there can be no movement except shivering.

WARMTH

Edward Lee

I would rather go cold than burn words, says the man
living in his cave, alone, save for the words at his fingertips, and the worlds in his head, some his, most born from the minds of others;

his nights are cold, but when sleeps comes,
as it sometimes does,
his dreams are warm, his dreams are warm, and full of lives worth dying for.

Into the Sunset

Emily Blackmore

But the Sun, Also, Is a Liar

CL Bledsoe

With the day-old donuts, you can start to feel like the concrete forgives us our trespasses. The same with the used shoes, still smelling of animal and something that's forgotten what animal it is. Who the hell can afford to live? Wandering the thrift store is like vacationing in someone else's life. Were these things once precious? Was I? So many hours spent to buy trash. Like everyone, I was seventeen once and knew more than time ever could, all of it golden guesswork that would later prove to be right. But it doesn't matter. Someone's always going to hurt better than you, which doesn't mean you can ever give up on trying. Children should always be dirty and smiling or you've done something wrong. I remember one afternoon, my uncle shooed me out from under my father's feet, in the Fish Shack, where they teetered, drinking and hating each other. He told me to go play outside. That's what kids were supposed to do, not cling in fear to their father's clinging in fear while their mother's were dying on the hill far above. I sat in the dirt until my shoulders, legs, and neck burned.
There was something important he meant me to learn.

Trousers.

DS Maolalai

thwack thwack. tick tock. triancars carrying passengers. and me going home. bridges pulling buildings like thread through tatty trousers.

all tired. slung out drunks dangle over dublin.
I look out the window at the lights.
night yawns, goes outside and hangs its laundry. it dapples, dripping on the river.

Six Translations Of A Painting Seen From A Train

Hibah Shabkhez

ONE

Five smiling children sitting in a row One fidgets and stubs his big toe But dares not stop smiling. The squeezed ends Of his eyes like dried rivers flow From nothing to nothing.

TWO

Four smiles will the pencil to move faster One wills it not to stop, master The art of eternal movement that sends Coins home for bread. It drifts past her From nothing to nothing.

THREE

How many smiles must embrace the same pain Before it is cliché? Can you stain Enough canvas to exorcise what rends And scatters the self-flogged brain From nothing to nothing?

FOUR

One smile is tethered to a gold necklace One to an unseen mother's face One rakes the canvas, one for dreams unbends:
But this wistful one just seeks grace
From nothing to nothing.

FIVE

Five smiles are unevenly given out To five faces. In them, without One uttered word, is caught home-love that mends, And unlovedness wheeled about
From nothing to nothing.

SIX

For smiles such as these a mural to thread First there should have been a dark dread Of much grandeur. Is it hunger that lends The skill for this dance of the dead
From nothing to nothing?

Due Date

Cameron Morse

Due tomorrow, Lili brings up her childhood friend who was two weeks late delivering a son, with no rear end, no living breath.

Orange pearl of sunrise ensconced in pine needles, couched in dark branches. Theo tests me by rolling the front of his little tikes shopping cart over the foot of Barb's driveway. Phyllis waves behind her curb's barricade of unraked leaves. A couple strings of Canadian geese oscillate above the smoking chimney pipes.

I lift Theo into the basket of his own cart, his legs draped over the rim. Doubled over, I push him home to wipe his runny nose.

Magenta

Cameron Morse

Stop trying to make it work.

Don't try.

It will be all right.

Just melt. Allow your self to melt.

Be moment, water. Wait for whatever: Whatever knows best.

Bless. Be less.
Be little. Forget.

Death will be like this forgetting, this orange blank behind your eyelids, serviceberry pink,

almost magenta.

The sapling planted for my unborn daughter has berried in an orchard in Magenta, the color of the Battle of I close my eyes.

Gen Z

Pasquale Trozzolo

Alexa,
My Alexa
Those eyes so blue
That black hair Silk and smooth
You stir the air Longing,
Knowing
You're never out of range.
Like a thief in the shadows You steel my desire striking without warning Nearly illegal.
A ritual of sway.
Alexa,
My Alexa
Stop hiding
On the singed edges of Delusion.
"Sorry I'm having trouble Understanding"

Gen Z

Pasquale Trozzolo

Reprobate creature

Kim Whysall-Hammond

The digital whale will still call through the waters but now is linked in to the world wide wet streaming her songs to land bound followers and the digital dolphin has claimed the podcast as her own, working with the other members of her pod

Meanwhile, the digital octopus undercover of the more famous mammals has taken residence in your inner ear whispers her incandescent mantras and solutions to all your woes direct to your subconscious makes you her willing slave will own the planet tomorrow

Resignation letter.

DS Maolalai

the office they gave us held a view of birds. how then should one focus on scheduling appointments and booking calls by contractors? flight stretched like a long arm over mountains and tangled tablecloth.

We are Tuareg men now

Obinna Chilekezi

this virus turns all to tuareg men of sahara veiled to the eyes locked down to our veins stay home, stay safe, the jingle goes but the real tuareg men a nomad not for the microbe but as their lives but here we are, locked down and masked our world ever diseased but not this kind of stay safe, stay home for nomads the diurnal species, homo animalized actively mainly during daylight then the noval corana mask gift from unseen microbe, turning our world to that of tuareg men all veiled, as they walked in the broad daylight.

ATTITUDE

Jeffrey Zable

“Okay, okay,” I said, “if you think it will help improve my attitude, I’ll keep saying it to myself, “It’s great to be alive! It’s great to be alive. . .”

So, I kept saying it to myself, but the more I was around people, read human history, and listened to the news, the less and less I was able to say it.

Eventually, I couldn’t say it at all, but I was able to say, “What a mother fuckin world! I can’t understand why my parents brought me here. And now as old age besets me, I ask myself if it was worth it to suffer this long for so little in return.”

” Okay, okay,” I said, “I’ll stop right there and try it again. “It’s great to be alive! It’s great to be alive. . .”

Something will finally ferry us across the shore

Goodness Olanrewaju Ayoola

"British 5G towers are being set on fire because of coronavirus conspiracy theories"

The Verge

Blame it on the fear freezing us into Gullibility;

My wife woke me to A broadcast saying
Bill Gates is the Antichrist. The screen watches my unconvincing eyes.

Because I am opposed to speculations;
It's not yet the end of the world, I told her.

In the evening, another Broadcast Whatsapps, a man folds his hoax Around a voice note in a hybrid mix of facts and falsehood.

He says radiation is another word for the harbinger of Death, and then,
A baptism of fire floods the internet.

In my language, the thin line between herbs and Vegetables is puerility, meaning something will finally ferry us across the shore:

- a) Impatience or*
- b) An unchecked collective ignorance.*

Locked in a High Castle Where Every Sound Repeats Itself

Christian Hanz Lozada

They say we get stuck in political echo chambers where we amplify the comfortable voices like the soft shhhh of ocean sounds that play in the background of mindful meditation apps or the white noise that lulls you to sleep.

For fear of getting locked into this chamber, I follow the social media aunties and uncles the ones who post “9 out of 10 aren’t brave enough . . . “ “we don’t _____ anymore but should” “I send the victims hope” “I send the cops, the soldiers,
the frontline prayers”

for fear of forgetting this is blood, I follow these social media aunties and uncles who pierce my chamber at that place where the blood flows in, deprived of oxygen and life my heart works hard to pull the blood through this chamber to change breath to beat to give me enough air to keep going.

I'm lucky it beats again

again

again

each beat in my chamber is where my hopes go each beat in your chamber is where my prayers go it's too bad you don't know that you need me that we need each other it's too bad you can only hear one heart's echo rather than hearts in harmony

Seeing Prison Bars in Ordinary Things

R.M. Cymber

"He who fights with monsters should look to it that he himself does not become a monster. And if you gaze long into an abyss, the abyss also gazes into you." -Friedrich Nietzsche, Beyond Good and Evil, Aphorism 146

Sofa cushion dividers, parking lot lines, my reflection of lilac petals, Wal-Mart barcodes, pews from the cathedral overlook, cobwebs, Marty Byrde's eyes, rhymes from Chaucer, Google Maps skyscrapers

Footprints on the beach, tabs on Firefox, yearbook pictures, Puffs of air from flipbooks, gem angles, Washington's smallpox, Flintlock pistols, two-inch heels, pretty fences

Calendar spreadsheets, Mondrian's patterns, paperclips, High school bleachers, tiger stripes, train tracks, Space between atoms, gas pumps, the Capulet balcony

The Shower Head is a Microphone

Stuart Kenny

The shower head is a microphone;
every bathroom tile 100 members of a stadium audience who have paid extortionate amounts to be here with me, on what promises to be a memorable morning.

They cheer & exclaim & shout my name when I pull back the shower curtain; & step onto the bathtub stage.

The water hits me like audience praise; for Rihanna does not sing 'California King Bed', oh no, not today;
today it is all mine.

I nail a dance routine that I will later tell an interviewer:
"was not even coreographed beforehand, I just move the way I feel, you know?"

One bathroom tile watches on through their phone camera; another budging past several others to get to the front.

A roar goes up; the shampoo comes out - for the guitar solo everyone forgets is in this song.

One tile nudges the tile next to it & shouts "WILL YOU MARRY ME" over the music.

Another bathroom tile my favourite bathroom tile Simply watches on in wonderment, & sings all the words along with me.

That tile will ask me for an autograph when I go back to the toilet later that day.

Ground Yourself in Reality Today

Julia Rubin

Before your Tinder date buy a lint roller. Cleanse yourself of cat hair in the Walgreens parking lot. Ground yourself in reality today, your horoscope says. You're not crazy you're just kissing girls now. Your date is biting into a slice of pizza. She is smiling. Your date is a dog person. Kiss her. We are all cat people, really, even the dog people. A little crazy.

A little lonely. Ground yourself in pepperoni, black olives, that birthmark below her eye. Reality is safer shared with strangers. Obsession is the sanest thing we know. Crazy looks best on first dates.

Talk about your cat too much. Your date will want to kiss you. You will want to kiss everybody. You'll want to kiss nobody. Ground yourself on a flight to San Francisco. A woman behind you is reciting cat breeds. Calico. Savannah. Russian Blue. Repeat it on your next date or whenever you feel crazy.

We're all crazy cat ladies once in a while. Kissing strangers. Kissing nobody. Seeking to scare our dates away before the last cheesy bite. Ground yourself in Calico, Savannah, Russian Blue.

The Sweetgum Tree

Andrew Kasey

Fun fact about me:
I was born at the age of sixteen.
Nothing before that happened.
How could it?
I was still curled up in my cocoon.
Wrapped tightly in the dark, hanging from the branches of a sweetgum tree.
Now my grown-boy teeth crush watermelon gum into pieces and suck the flavour out.
I spit my pink inner body fluid out onto the grave of my manly milk teeth.
A tiny gravestone between two roots.
Older than I'll ever be.
Younger than I am now.
I was born at sixteen (and a half, maybe).
Before that I was a collection of molecules instead of industrial waste cobbled together with the glue from a first grade project that I never did.
How could I?
I was up there, in the sweetgum tree.

In Waves Of Light

Bruce McRae

The bee is pollen's messenger.
Her suggestive dance entices the sun to construct another meadow.
'Build me a flower the colour of which is an unseen frequency.' And for this deed, a blandishment, the golden eye of honey in the comb, a gift placed under the angels' tree, continents drifting past and the instant preserved in amber. When once the nectar of the gods fell pretty on the tongue.

I think about walking through a forest of tall, slender trees

Brad Stumpf

With dense tops that allow small Dapples of light to fall softly, Tracing the contours of my arms as I move.

I'm following your footsteps.
I know your toes and see your stride break into slight rhythmic dances as you move with joy.

I see you smile - but only in my mind.
I run and know that, someday when I find you, we will roll on this sun dappled earth and Make love below the birds and squirrels.
I will trace the outline of each sunspot on your body using my tongue And then my finger tip.

We will build a house to look out of its windows.
Paint it bright blue and fill it with butterflies To bring the sky into this shaded hollow.

Strange Trip

Wayne Russell

Something has a stranglehold on me, the world is a ball of yarn spinning in decomposition, lava lamp eyes rolling waves, she is pulling something and I cannot breathe, I can not see, it's dark.

Love held the flame and burned the house down! can you hear a dandelion chain, gnashing of teeth, wooden shoes clacking heels? It's cold here in her arms.

Death brandished a sharp razor-like reaper, her eyes plummeted cascade, liquid steel euphoria. one by one there they go into premature graves, engulfed by the flatness of fatherless earth.

Can you see the kaleidoscope birds flying backward into their leafless trees? Can you see lost years escape cold, from your tar pit druid escapades?

The liquid gods drove me into this state of madness, but I broke free and escaped, Floridian son, drowning as one, this life is a strange venture, a florescent trip.

WILDEST DREAMS

Michael Angelo Stephens

Who could have guessed that this defeat, This shame would be a kind of rebirth, A second coming, and that the flaws,
The residual anger and the plummeting Ego would herald a new person entirely, One who cared about the smell of roses (the feint odor of vanilla bean and lemons), Or that this person would get to touch You everywhere, including your thighs, Eyelids, nose, lips, or that one might dance Across the fog of memory with a new Cadence, that seeing would become A new gift, that hearing the birds in the park, The birds, the birds, would excite such rhythms In the air and along the roots of things Until there was nothing but sensations, A tinkling without the fear of, the shame for,
Being alive, the sin of being born suddenly Become the gift of this new life you had.

Attachment

R.M. Cymer

a thrust jerks the kite spool temperamental shadow on mother's eyes at vital moments when the girl leaning on her dress rides the waves of noon plush bunnies clinging to backpack, leaves applauding, grassland furious

College goblins

Morgan Boyer

A white woman in a grey fleece cardigan carries her two-year-old from the campus school nursery

A puffy-cheeked toddler looks at me as I drudge out of the second floor and pass by them.

Mommy, who are those people?
They're college students.
Why are they down there?
They live here. This is their home.

Yes, we are devious goblins, our backs hover over each other as they play Cards Against Humanity in the lounge.

They have Cheeto-frosted fingers & showers that smell like semen and piss. Honestly, we might be cleaner if we stayed out of it.

One of our goblin girls says while playing the Oregon Trail card game that It's not whorish if it's oral as the ants that carry away white-sugar & sprinkle-coated animal crackers & her friend watches the time just because she has the early shift at the Jimmy John's on Forbes Ave tomorrow. We have henna tattoos done by a white woman & the nursing students marathon the Bachelor while the communications major sits in a cave chatting with her online boyfriend she met through League of Legends Yes, child, we are the filthy goblins that you will become in sixteen years.

the winning loser

Paul Tanner

it's nice when decisions are made for you.

when the landlady slams the door on your nose, when the boss hands you your P45, when the jobcentre sends that letter refusing to help you out, when the text says you're dumped, when that fist comes at you, closed.

it's nice when you're sitting on a bench black eyed and horny with a bin bag of your clothes every single life decision having been made for you thinking well, now there's nothing left to beg for, my begging days are behind me.

then you just sit on the aforementioned bench, the aforementioned
You.

Rain, rain

David Capps

When the sky is prolonged and the rain speaks and you are a universe unto yourself,

I cup my hands, lay flat in the mud, and absorb newer rhythms as they happen by:

the squirrel that gets into your voice—immense hollow oak that it is and can't find a way out the crowded schoolyard filled with blissful chainlink sounds of prayer never heard before the rain on the metallic shed that is my hesitation full of tools and underworlds.

I listen until it all grows faint again, and the distance is humanly measurable.

LOCAL WEATHER

Kenneth Pobo

In Micah we often talk about the rain, weather, a subject safe as a storm cellar.
We fear storms, especially tornadoes.
We shy away from permanence.

Weather, a subject safe as a storm cellar, and that's better than arguing about God-- we shy away from permanence, yet most of us here go to church—that's better than arguing about God.

Opinions darken so fast. Storms don't last,
yet most of us here go to church.
It's a way to have one thing endure.

Opinions darken so fast. Storms don't last, though they overtake our homes.
It's a way to have one thing endure
when a marriage should end but doesn't.

Though they overtake our homes,
we hide our worst fights from our neighbors.
When a marriage should end but doesn't—
how many days lost to a stab of lightning?

We hide our worst fights from our neighbors, say everything is fine, change the subject.
How many days lost to a stab of lightning?
In Micah we often talk about the rain.

Synonyms

Stephen Mead

The wind sounds like whales the way a land parched by drought has water's wave patterns.
This is the earth, imprints as legacies.

Configurations approach the dock, sonar schools moving in to bop wood as breakers lap.

Eyes rise to decipher exactly what's out there.
What is heard cannot be seen, only felt like a picture drawn from experience years back.

It's the same refrain, the same frequency, these shadows retain.

Time washes over, nature, concurrent, recollecting not loss in the aftermath, but some stronger impulse.
It lingers, hangs on, heartbeats, like children, building, filtering tenacious, a synonymous pitch in the air.

Axolotl

David Capps

For a moment you're an apparition: faint deft smile of a not-yet-living ghost—then it's gone, your mouth returns to nebulous: solid white web with shades of tombstone: husk of neogenetic manipulation. Yet there is urgency in your buccal pump hiccupping breath, that even-lipped surface music of your ever-silent slap at birth. Shimmer, shimmer axolotl, as your papillae-laced cloaca leaves a cloudy trail.

The Crossing

Martin Willitts Jr

Salamanders are grateful for the warm spring rain, sliding in protective darkness through forest-splashes of jazz notes.

They're awkward escaping to another place — one familiar and haunting, the other beckoning and elusive.

Part celebration and part welcoming the urgency, both slip quickly, subtly, noiselessly, trying to avoid predators.

Rain and starless nights provide good cover.
They use stealth and do not throw away caution.
Immigrants act the same.

This is what their movements looks like: jerky; undeterred; hell-bent crossing dangerous highways.
That's the journey, the end result, every second between.

Another Aubade

Karlo Sevilla

I lay aside the newspaper, put down my cup of coffee, and look out the window for the affirmation, that Every day, at cusp of dawn, the dark, after an initial (semblance of) struggle to keep its place, bows and solemnly retreats to give way to ascent of inflamed purple suffusing sky, to conquering light casting its rays, banishing swath after shadowy swath, silently sprawling supreme over every creature rested or oppressed by night, surfacing a million flowers anchored on rolling greens of eternal grass, lifting their chins and shining faces of petals in celebration of colors, as birds sing in delight of flitting butterflies and their fluttering kaleidoscope wings...

Then, born of the collective power of flapping wings and rustling leaves, the first wind utters softest sigh, then gathers strength and blows over waking lands and stirring waters, and proclaims across farthest reaches of breaking day, that light has come.

Every day, each break of dawn becomes just like the last — again and again.

All these suffice to reinforce my faith that mysterious forces conspire, so that come tomorrow, it's still a beautiful world.

the matter is

Margaret Koger

secret hush-hush (never tell) nobody knows (you're nobody, too) secret if there be three in on it and two—be dead she said;

fact of the one old man—he fact of that one old man's matter is his name was Fred heebejeebie Fred the Dread heebejeebie and he's a (skull and bones)

dead;

told her mama don't tell (nobody that's who)

and mama's (matter of fact) dead too; so it's a secret but (couldn't tell you where or how) he reappears every now

(hold your breath)

and then

A Dear Green

Carter Vance

I scour the scrapyards, hopeful to strike riches, some spot of land:
shimmering acre to draw around with fenceposts, anchor wire and call alone.

I arrive in carriage time, flouting rule and upriver dancing, from scattershot ravine echoes that trap ourselves in fearful amber, in rancor of things left apart.

I lose some pinwheel grace, no longer broken glass of bottle colour and heavy sole upon soil in crashing through night windows and to the warm, embracing place all alight.

SHIPS

Mark Jackley

looking for the mothership
I opened the door and walked barefooted to the starlit field beyond the street and found lightning bugs like drifty boats with signal lamps that beamed a code to break the dark where radio silence is maintained

Mallards

Jeremy Nathan Marks

Envy is a green-headed bird darting for sodden crumbs on a pond
A boy holds his sack of stale rye old pumpernickel floating morsels amidst summer's sour mash One palm feeds the ducks the other tries to bag

The breeze
His wishes are loose feathers mallards of headlong intention.

Mantis

David Capps

The green canopy is a curtain jilted as they stick, bite, claw, consume a love legs go to pieces as in a rodeo stomp jaws clutch lazily his outstretched, oozing abdomen o your ethereal antennae in the heart that has no more to give

Alchemy

Elizabeth Spencer Spragins a black chrysalis cradles wings of molten glass—monarch butterflies walk lightly on the milkweed and feast on flames without fire

~Winchester, Virginia

Transformations

Wayne Russell

Ghostly mist a trail of vapor, her subtle kiss and off she goes, a mosaic of fond memories, dancing in shrapnel history.

Silver aligned lotus, sweet in justified cadence, her face is a visage, enraptured in hues of phenomenal, shimmering, proportion.

Now lost upon opposite shores, nostalgia whispers at the corridors of my now vacant heart.

Alchemy sun lying wounded!
Lead transformed into gold?

Transformation of an angel, into her mortal existence?

Place

Stephen Mead

Stay in to hold up:
this shell of bones, enough curves, the smooth, the nearly ornate, & next the hollows, all an expanse for ravines further down.

I mean to embrace them, step away alone & quietly: no masquerade performance but the grappling & breaking upon shale's sharp roots.

How coarse is truth when genuinely swallowed?
More a punch in the stomach to apprehend air, its loss, immediate, clean: brutality bolting grief to the loins, a twisting upon & beyond that term now a mercy for the privacy of an undertow's grip.

Reckoning is the returning afterwards, changed by the journey one was stuck in, consuming nothingness, a tank, empty, bereft except for fumes running on.

Burned Up Bundle

Carter Vance

It was spectacular, sleepwalk and briny, when I came out to wire shores for a light lick of morning's air; felt something grow across from wavering smoke signs, pit fire leavings that criss-cross skies and leave a breathless swimming dark beneath.

When I wane in grandeur, placed in bow-breaking time from our good days that left marks deep in skin damage, then I became more plastic, with rains drifting through.
If I made the effigy stake, was well-thought and worthy, it wouldn't have been so close to lifetime's defeat; still, too cold for all that we were, just signals passing on scrap ice and plated mineral.

A Bastard's Vow

Mugu Ganesan

A reckless act of sex between the sheets of wasted dark and silken, starry sky.
Both under passion's spell, so wild and warped, you weaved ornate whims made of hope and bliss.
I'm an estranged soul though. My mom and you gave birth to me: a misbegotten child you left behind after the act, guilt-free, and sunk back into your fake universe of lives and things you never quite deserved and hid behind, obscuring failures.

I fed off thoughts abandoned, left behind, I held the fingers of the eastern gale, and slept beneath the soaring eagle's wings—the folks who fostered me and christened me as Dream, my first name. And last? Still unclaimed.

I've grown and built a life that's all my own, I'm eager to avenge days spent alone,
I smolder with the vows made to myself:

To make you take me as your progeny, to take you far away from your fake life to one you fancied on that drunken night.

Awakening

Bill Stifler

The wonder of Frankenstein's monster does not lie in the dead flesh animated but rather in that sharp mind, bright with flame and anger. Did the lightning enlighten the monster? Did the heavens open to him, or was it hellfire itself that burned? Where is the true horror?

Imagine awakening in that body, cold, hard, the flesh clammy with death.
Imagine the face of your father bending over you to catch that first, faint spark, only to see the flame burn his eyes with fear and loathing, to see him tear himself away, leaving you lying on the cold, hard slab still unaware of what you have become.

Imagine how hard it is to rise, joints stiffened in death, only now bending to the fire burning within. Rising, newborn, legs unsteady, gawky, stuttering limbs that gravity drags back to the grave, only the fire within, that unnatural spark yearning upward resisting stagnation and decay.

Imagine seeing other children at play, hearing their screams burning in your ears, watching their faces flame in fear.
Imagine the stones, dirt flung, the coffin patter pelting pain, the grave faces now burning with fear.

In the end, cold calls to cold, flesh burns with ice, silence crystalline encasing the body, stiff and still once more.

[Portrait of a] Young Woman's Brain Anatomy

Kristin LaFollette

It's the version made of lake water, your body like tape made out of paper.

I see orange peels and smell the smoke and ash of a wood-burning stove, gasoline on a concrete floor, the mustiness of an old car that you said would be perfect for smoking pot.

I see a background of cemetery grass.
To be your sister is to share the same skin, to hear in the same fallible way.

I think of the sound of clocks, the kind with hands that keep me awake at night.

I remember the blueness of your fingernails and my touch to your face, hoping my blood could move from me to you, blood that we already shared anyway.

It was cruel for me to think there was more of you.
The tumor was all there was.

Brain as an Unwound Clock

CL Bledsoe

Some kid playing screaming music downstairs. Lean in close so I can tell you what I think of you as soon as I think of something about you. The way that a cup responds to tea, over time, this is the way thoughts are coated by hatred, negative impulses.
This is not to say that forgiveness isn't a fool's errand. Rather, I knew a speed freak who said he liked to wake up to a new world every fifteen minutes or so. If you were to ask me how I feel, I would first have to stare at the ocean for nearly an hour – not too long but just long enough – sometime after the sun has begun to set, sand cooling, spray on skin.
Or, the flow of traffic on the street shimmering in the sun as I walk back to my desk from the psychiatrist I don't trust who wants to put me on lithium. I've always liked the song, but the trees, shading my way make it an easy ten, fifteen degrees cooler.
It's nice outside as long as you're inside under air-conditioning. I don't like to think of this as the hottest summer in the last 100 years; I like to think of it as the coolest summer of the next 100 years. While old white men drive by in convertibles.
A kind of ambivalence, I suppose.

Shooting Star

Nancy Byrne Iannucci

If only I were hot enough-I'd slap your face so hard, throw you into the steaming, dark street, then watch you from my window, leaning against an Edward Hopper streetlamp, gazing up at me in disbelief.

In Praise of a Sweet Tooth

Goodness Olanrewaju Ayoola

i proud teetotaler i cure sadness with a bottle of sugar until my tongue grow half insipid half sour full jocular you wouldn't believe me if i unzip these shoulders padded high and brown mountains are falling once i wanted to become what become becomes tipsy on sugar i asked a drunk man for old clothes i cannot wear them because fear because i don't want to know what it feels to breathe in another man's skin how to wear another's smell of rum once i had felt like a god when i opened opaque curtains to let the sun in into my lungs once i had felt i held the switch to the sun so i could keep ignoring a compilation of darkness in my sweet bones once i borrowed a guitar and wrote colored songs on my diabetes prescriptions funny how palliatives come in colors too so you know now only my wife knows that i am color blind so you know now the songs are no more mine because they left with the rhythm and returning i bribed a boy to swallow my dosage i missed watching the gold brownness breathing brewing in my genitals and when the ants mine round the spill-overs on the WC i defend my heart of gold but my wife likes pink

Aerial

Marcy McNally

poised on perilous pedestal, posed in kaleidoscopic light, the acrobat, bold, leaps, fearless, airborne, gliding, swirling, twirling and curling, balancing music and muscle, lithe, tight, gripping rippling rope, flying bar, and swinging ring, fleeting, fluid flight, caught in death-defying, stellar, spotlight spectacle.

dangerous dangles astonish, thrilling angles astound shadowbox circus crowds, as the mercurial, mesmerizing aerial leans, into, falling, forward, tip-top, upward, surreal, in suspension, magically traversing and transcending a sequined, canvas sky.

Implosions

Mantz Yorke

i.m. The crew of the submarine ARA San Juan, lost on 15 November 2017

In the science lab

We watched as our teacher boiled water in a five-litre tin, turned off the heat, stoppered it tight. For minutes it stood on the tripod: suddenly the metal buckled, twisted and toppled to the bench. She told us the steam inside the can had condensed, and the pressure had simply become too low to hold back the atmosphere outside.

In the deep

Twelve months to find the submarine crumpled, nine hundred metres down. On the surface so strong, its hull had yielded, a tin can crushed by the brutish pressure of the deep. Remote from our submersible, we imagined the San Juan lacking power and sinking beyond contact, its condemned crewmen waiting, listening for the buckling that would confirm their fate.

Inauspicious

Lauren Scharhag

In the waking green of spring, I see absence written everywhere.
The flocks grow fewer and fewer, no formations to herald the season.
The air that should be filled with song, the silent trees, the blank sky.
Even the electrical wires hum vacantly.
You could count on one hand the sparrows and jays, the geese who mate for life suddenly single in the brown creek bed; the tanagers and buntings a distant scarlet-and-blue fever dream.
Those that are here sing less, solemn as mourners;
no augur needed to interpret callers giving up for want of response.

Multilingual

Abhinita Mohanty

In my country, they said we have myriad emotions, Unlike most others where moods can be put into a single Petri dish.
Here, speech changes faster like stream bubbles.
In the blink of tired eyes and slipping of mood through sweaty palms, You may miss a world of story and lifetime of sombre words, So, sometimes I dream, of getting humongous, cookie jars and trap, words, foreign, exotic than the English lang, In my own land, a refugee thrives, Stranger, and so close,
And life akin to me, and emojis, So incomprehensible, they bounce, flee, Before I see them efface on surfaces.

Pure Music

Tim Kahl

Poet forgets the body eats.
More time to think of lost desire.
Stomach rumbles in four-four time.
It's pure music, but full of dread.
Listen up. Food rewards only those with mouths.
Speak, poet, speak . . . before you're dead.

eternal.

Erzsi Csonka

oceans

dried down to salt the burning sun mountains

ground into dust

the howling winds

stars turn to supernovas and back to stars again and at the end of it all

- her

eternal

Author Bios

Andrew Kasey is a young writer who was born and raised in Belgium but who now studies English Literature in the UK. He has four cats, a rabbit and a turtle. All six of these pets are far more interesting than he is. Andrew will read and write anything, but his preferred genres are horror, poetry, and non-fiction. He lives in Brighton. Some of his other works have been published in Sonder Magazine, LGBTQ Survivors Zine, Butter Magazine, Red Zine, and Honeymag.

Stuart Kenny is a full time journalist, creative writer and spoken word poet based in Edinburgh. His journalism has been published in The Guardian, Metro, Vice, and many more, and he's had short stories and poetry published by 404 Ink, Speculative Books, Nutmeg Magazine, Dreich Magazine, and various others in Scotland. www.stuart-kenny.co.uk

All things are connected. That's the premise of what William J. Joel does. Each of Mr. Joel's interests informs each other. Mr. Joel has been teaching computer science since 1983 and has been a writer even longer. His works have recently appeared in Common Ground Review, DASH Literary Journal, The Blend International, Liminality, and Chronogram.

Eduard Schmidt-Zorner is a translator and writer of poetry, haibun, haiku and short stories. He writes in four languages: English, French, Spanish and German and holds workshops on Japanese and Chinese style poetry and prose. Member of four writer groups in Ireland and lives in County Kerry, Ireland, for more than 25 years and is a proud Irish citizen, born in Germany. Published in 88 anthologies, literary journals, and broadsheets in USA, UK, Ireland, Japan, Sweden, Italy, Bangladesh, India, France, Mauritius, Nigeria, and Canada.

Bruce McRae, a Canadian musician currently residing on Salt Spring Island BC, is a multiple Pushcart nominee with over 1,600 poems published internationally in magazines such as Poetry, Rattle, and the North American Review. His books are The So-Called Sonnets (Silenced Press); An Unbecoming Fit Of Frenzy; (Cawing Crow Press); Like As If (Pski's Porch); Hearsay (The Poet's Haven).

Wayne Russell is or has been many things in his time upon this planet, he has been a creative writer, world traveler, graphic designer, former soldier, and former sailor. Wayne has been widely published in both online and hard copy creative writing magazines. From 2016-17 he also founded and edited Degenerate Literature. In late 2018, the editors at Ariel Chart nominated Wayne for his first Pushcart Prize for the poem "Stranger in a Strange Town." Where Angels Fear is his debut poetry book published by Guerrilla Genesis Press.

Stephanie Hauer has been enamored by writing since before she even learned how to read. She's usually writing poetry and fiction, or muttering at a manuscript she's editing. When she needs a break from staring at the page, Stephanie is probably petting her guinea pig or working on some crafts. stephaniehauer.com

V. Jane Schneeloch has been either writing or encouraging others to write for most of her life. A life-long resident of Springfield, Massachusetts, and retired from teaching English at East Hartford High School, she has led writing workshops for youths, senior citizens, and incarcerated women. Her poetry collections include Turning Over Leaves (Antrim House Books, 2015) and Climbing to the Moon: Poems Inspired by the Art of Georgia O'Keeffe (Finishing Line Press, 2009). Her work has also been published in numerous journals. Her plays, In Hiding and The Test, were produced at the Drama Studio in Springfield where she serves as office manager. She also maintains a blog: "Musing over my Oatmeal." <http://oatmealmusing.blogspot.com/>

Michael Angelo Stephens is author of the critically acclaimed novel The Brooklyn Book of the Dead, the travel memoir Lost in Seoul (Random House); and the award-winning essay collection Green Dreams. His next book, due out shortly from MadHat (no space), is a collection of prose poems about an out of work actor who lands the part of Hamlet. It is entitled History of Theatre or the Glass of Fashion.

Hibah Shabkhez is a writer of the half-yo literary tradition, an erratic language-learning enthusiast, a teacher of French as a foreign language and a happily eccentric blogger from Lahore, Pakistan. Her work has previously appeared in Wellington Street Review, Black Bough, Nine Muses, Borrowed Solace, Ligeia, Cordite Poetry, and a number of other literary magazines. Studying life, languages, and literature from a comparative perspective across linguistic and cultural boundaries holds a particular fascination for her. <https://hibahshabkhezicc.wordpress.com/>

Edward Lee's poetry, short stories, non-fiction and photography have been published in magazines in Ireland, England and America, including The Stinging Fly, Skylight 47, Acumen, and Smiths Knoll. His debut poetry collection Playing Poohsticks On Ha'Penny Bridge was published in 2010. He is currently working towards a second collection. He also makes musical noise under the names Ayahuasca Collective, Lewis Milne, Orson Carroll, Blinded Architect, Lego Figures Fighting, and Pale Blond Boy. <https://edwardmlee.wordpress.com>

Karla Huston, Wisconsin Poet Laureate (2017-2018) and the author of A Theory of Lipstick (Main Street Rag: 2013) as well as 8 chapbooks of poetry including Grief Bone (Five-Oaks Press: 2017). www.wisconsinpoet-laureate.org www.karlahuston.com www.millwriters.org

R.M. Cymber's work is featured in Burningword Literary Journal, Five:2:One Magazine, and Crack the Spine Literary Magazine. He is also an editor at River Styx Literary Magazine in St. Louis. Currently, he is writing poetry and short stories.

Brad Stumpf is a Chicago-based interdisciplinary artist from St. Louis, Missouri. He attended the School of the Art Institute of Chicago, where he graduated with a Bachelor of Fine Arts in 2015. <http://www.brad-stumpf.com/index.html>

Antara is an avid fantasy-fiction reader, sometimes writer of prose and poetry, you can find her dancing, lost in crinkly pages of classical and modern literature or with paint in her hair and pencil marks on her hands. She is on a journey to find herself and will immortalise you if you come too close.

Paul Tanner. Novel 'Jobseeker' on Amazon now. Shortlisted for the Erb-acce 2020 Poetry Prize. Latest collection Shop Talk: Poems for Shop Workers is published by Penniless Press.

Cameron Morse was diagnosed with a glioblastoma in 2014. With a 14.6-month life expectancy, he entered the Creative Writing Program at the University of Missouri—Kansas City and, in 2018, graduated with an M.F.A. His poems have been published in numerous magazines, including New Letters, Bridge Eight, Portland Review, and South Dakota Review. His first poetry collection, Fall Risk, won Glass Lyre Press's 2018 Best Book Award. His latest is Baldy (Spartan Press, 2020). He lives with his wife Lili and two children in Blue Springs, Missouri, where he serves as poetry editor for Harbor Review. For more information, check out his Facebook page or website.

Originally from Saskatchewan, Allan Lake has lived in Vancouver, Cape Breton Island, Ibiza, Tasmania, and Melbourne. Poetry Collection: Sand in the Sole (Xlibris, 2014). Lake won Lost Tower Publications (UK) Comp 2017 and Melbourne Spoken Word Poetry Fest/The Dan 2018. Poetry Chapbook (Ginninderra Press, 2020): My Photos of Sicily.

David Spicer has published poems in The American Poetry Review, CircleStreet, Gargoyle, Moria, Oyster River Pages, Ploughshares, Remington Review, Santa Clara Review, The Sheephead Review, Steam Ticket, Synaeresis, Third Wednesday, and elsewhere. Nominated for a Best of the Net three times and a Pushcart twice, he is author of six chapbooks, the latest being Tribe of Two (Seven Circle Press). His third and fourth full-length collections, American Maniac (Hekate Publishing) and Confessional (Cyberwit.net) will soon be available. He lives in Memphis.

Obinna Chilekezi is a Nigerian poet and insurance practitioner whose poems have been published in journals and anthologies. He has three published collections which are: Son Chikezi too died, rejection and other poems and Songs of a Stranger in the Smiling Coast. One of his insurance texts won the 2016 African Insurance Organisation Book Award. He can be reached at ugobichi@yahoo.com or obinnachilekezi1@gmail.com.

Goodness Olanrewaju Ayoola is a Nigerian poet and teacher of English who reaches out to poetry as escapism from the contentions within and around him. His poetry has appeared in Glass, Pangolin Review, Mojave Heart, Ethel Zine, and elsewhere. He is a Best of the Net Award Nominee and author of Meditations (WRR, 2016). Say hi to him on @GoodnessLanre

R.T. Castleberry. His work has appeared in Blue Collar Review, Santa Fe Literary Review, Pedestal Magazine, Misfit, Trajectory, The Alembic, and Switchback. Internationally, it has been published in Canada, Wales, Ireland, Scotland, New Zealand, Portugal, the Philippines, and Antarctica. He's had poetry in the anthologies: Travails-An Anthology of Texas Poetry, TimeSlice, The Weight of Addition, Anthem: A Tribute to Leonard Cohen, You Can Hear the Ocean: An Anthology of Classic and Current Poetry and Level Land: Poetry For and About the I35 Corridor.

Freesia McKee is author of the chapbook How Distant the City (Headmistress Press, 2018). Her words have appeared in Flyway, Bone Bouquet, So to Speak, Tinderbox Poetry Journal, Virga, Painted Bride Quarterly, and more. Freesia is a staff book reviewer for South Florida Poetry Journal. Her reviews have also appeared in Tupelo Quarterly, Pleiades Book Review, Gulf Stream, and The Drunken Odyssey. Freesia was the winner of CutBank Literary Journal's 2018 Patricia Goedicke Prize in Poetry, chosen by Sarah Vap. Find her online at freesiamckee.com or on Twitter at @freesiamckee.

Stephen Mead is an Outsider multi-media artist and writer. Since the 1990s he's been grateful to many editors for publishing his work in print zines and eventually online. He is also grateful to have managed to keep various day jobs for the Health Insurance. Currently he is resident artist/curator for The Chroma Museum, artistic renderings of LGBTQI historical figures, organizations and allies predominantly before Stonewall. <https://thestephenmeadchromamuseum.weebly.com/>

John J. Brugaletta has published seven volumes of his poetry, the latest being Selected Poems (Future Cycle Press, 2019). X. J. Kennedy has called this volume "a vital contribution to American poetry." Brugaletta is Professor Emeritus at California State University, Fullerton, where he edited and published South Coast Poetry Journal for ten years, publishing such luminaries as Rita Dove, William Stafford, Robert Mezey, Kay Ryan, Lucy Shaw, Denise Duhamel, Denise Levertov and Mark Strand.

Juanita Rey is a Dominican poet who has been in this country five years. She has worked many jobs while studying to improve her English. She has been writing for a number of years but only recently has begun to take it seriously. She enjoys reading. Gabriel Garcia Marquez and Toni Morrison are particular favorites. Her work has been accepted by 2 River Vieu, Harbinger Asylum, Pennsylvania English, Petrichor Machine, and Madcap Poets.

David Capps is a philosophy professor at Western Connecticut State University. He is the author of two chapbooks: Poems from the First Voyage (The Nasiona Press, 2019) and A Non-Grecian Non-Urn (Yavanika Press, 2019). He lives in New Haven, CT.

Liz Whiteacre is a mother who gardens and teaches creative writing at the University of Indianapolis where she also advises Etchings Press, a student-run publisher. Whiteacre is the author of Hit the Ground, and her poetry has appeared in Disability Studies Quarterly, Wordgathering, Kaleidoscope, Breath, Shadow, and other literary magazines. <https://whiteacrehitstheground.wordpress.com/> <https://lizwhiteacre.wordpress.com/>

Sandy Deutscher Green writes from her home in Virginia USA where her work has been nominated for Best of the Net and appeared in Bitter Oleander, Blue Nib, Neologism, The Lake, and Qwerty, as well as in her chapbook, Pacing the Moon (Flutter Press, 2009). BatCat Press published her limited-edition chapbook, Lot for Sale. No Pigs, in June 2019. <https://sandrargreen.webs.com/>

Stephen Page is part Native American and part Scottish. He was born in Detroit. He is the author of four books of poetry: The Salty River Bleeds, A Ranch Bordering the Salty River, The Timbre of Sand, and Still Dandelions. He holds two AA's from Palomar College, a BA from Columbia University, and an MFA from Bennington College. He also attended Broward College. His literary criticisms have appeared regularly in the Buenos Aires Herald, How Journal, Gently Read Literature, North of Oxford, and the Fox Chase Review. His stories have been published in Amphibi, Birch Book Press, Bold + Italic, and more. He is the recipient of a First Place Prize in Poetry from Bravura, the Jess Cloud Memorial Prize, a Writer-in-Residence from the Montana Artists Refuge, a Full Fellowship from the Vermont Studio Center, an Imagination Grant from Cleveland State University, and an Arvon Foundation Ltd. Grant. He loves his wife, family, friends, long walks through woodlands, nature, solitude, journaling, spontaneous road trips, riding motorcycles, throwing cellphones into lakes, dog-earing pages in books, and making noise on his electric bass. <https://smpages.wordpress.com>

Gale Acuff has had poetry published in Ascent, Reed, Poet Lore, Chiron Review, Poem, Adirondack Review, Florida Review, Slant, Nebo, Arkansas Review, South Dakota Review, Roanoke Review, and many other journals in eleven countries. He has authored three books of poetry: Buffalo Nickel, The Weight of the World, and The Story of My Lives. Gale has taught university English courses in the US, China, and Palestine, where he teaches at Arab American University.

Karlo Sevilla, from Quezon City, Philippines, is the author of the full-length poetry collection, Metro Manila Mammal (Some Publishing, 2018), and the chapbook, You (Origami Poems Project, 2017). Recognized among The Best of Kitaab 2018 and twice nominated for the Best of the Net Anthology, his poems appear in the journals Philippines Graphic, Small Orange, Black Bough Poetry, Shot Glass Journal, detritus, Radius, Matter, The Daily Drunk; the anthology NOSTALGIYA, Antolohiya Ng Mga Tula of Samahang Lazaro Francisco; and others. His email address is karlosilverio.sevilla96@gmail.com, and his Twitter handle is @KarloSevilla.

Alexandra Graffeo is a poet and writer from Staten Island, New York. She earned her Master's in Fantasy Literature from the University of Glasgow, where she focused her studies on female representation in fantasy, with a special emphasis on Arthurian women. Her work is inspired by her academic background, her love of travel, and her desire to find magic in everyday life. Alex's poetry and short stories can also be found in OyeDrum Magazine (where she works as the Managing Editor), The Raven's Perch, and Disquiet Arts.

Kate LaDew is a graduate from the University of North Carolina at Greensboro with a BA in Studio Art. She resides in Graham, NC with her cats Charlie Chaplin and Janis Joplin.

Rhiannon Grant is a writer, teacher and Quaker based in Birmingham, UK, where she works in Woodbrooke's learning and research team. Her poems have appeared in Blue Mountain Review, Poethead, and A New Ulster, and another will be published in an anthology from the Emma Press. She also writes novels about LGBTQ+ relationships in history, and non-fiction about faith topics. Her latest book is a lively Q&A from Christian Alternative called Quakers Do What! Why? She discusses faith and writing on social media – @bookgeekrelg on Twitter, @rhiannonbookgeek on Instagram, and Rhiannon Grant on Facebook – and keeps a blog at brigid-foxandbuddha.wordpress.com Lukpata Lomba Joseph is Nigerian. He currently resides in Port Harcourt. His work has appeared in some journals/magazines including Jacar Press's One, Misfit Magazine, South Florida Poetry Journal, Squawk Back Journal, The Collidescope, and elsewhere. He enjoys reading Aesop's fables. He is an editor at U-Rights Magazine.

John C. Krieg is a retired landscape architect and land planner who formerly practiced in Arizona, California, and Nevada. He is also retired as an International Society of Arboriculture (ISA) certified arborist and currently holds seven active categories of California state contracting licenses, including the highest category of Class A General Engineering. He has written a college textbook entitled Desert Landscape Architecture (1999, CRC Press). John has had pieces published in A Gathering of the Tribes, Alternating Current, Blue Mountain Review, Clark Street Review, and more. In conjunction with filmmaker/photographer Charles Sappington, John has completed a two-part documentary film entitled Landscape Architecture: The Next Generation (2010). In some underground circles John is considered a master grower of marijuana and holds as a lifelong goal the desire to see marijuana federally legalized. Nothing else will do.

Yash Seyedbagheri is a graduate of Colorado State University's MFA program in fiction. He also has a BA in Political Science from Boise State University. A native of Boise, Idaho, his story, "Soon," was nominated for a Pushcart. Yash has also had work nominated for The Best Small Fictions. A self-proclaimed Romantic and Tchaikovsky devotee, Yash's work is forthcoming or has been published in WestWard Quarterly, Café Lit, (macro mic), and Ariel Chart, among others. Yash lives in Garden Valley, Idaho, and hopes to put together a flash fiction collection.

Theresa C. Gaynord likes to write about matters of self-inflection and personal experiences. She likes to write about matters of an out-of-body, out-of-mind state, as well as subjects of an idyllic, pagan nature and the occult. Theresa writes horror, as well as concrete gritty and realistic dramas. Theresa is said to be a witch and a poet, (within the horror writing community) and she has been published in a number of magazines, ezines, anthologies, and books throughout the years.

Margaret Koger is a school media specialist with a writing habit. She lives near the river in Boise, Idaho, and writes about nature (including human) as a way of staying alive (really) and connecting people within our stumbling culture.

DS Maolalai has been nominated four times for Best of the Net and three times for the Pushcart Prize. His poetry has been released in two collections, Love is Breaking Plates in the Garden (Encircle Press, 2016) and Sad Havoc Among the Birds (Turas Press, 2019).

Jeffrey Zable is a teacher and conga drummer who plays Afro-Cuban folkloric music for dance classes and Rumbas around the San Francisco Bay Area. His poetry, fiction, and non-fiction have appeared in hundreds of literary magazines and anthologies. Recent writing in Nauseated Drive, Hypnopomp, Ink In Thirde, Tigershark, After The Pause, and many others.

Carter Vance is a writer and poet originally from Cobourg, Ontario, Canada, currently residing in Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada. His work has appeared in such publications as The Smart Set, Contemporary Verse 2 and A Midwestern Review, amongst others. He was previously a Harrison Middleton University Ideas Fellow. His latest collection of poems, Places to Be, is currently available from Moonstone Arts Press.

Mark Jackley's most recent book of poems is On the Edge of a Very Small Town, available by emailing chineseplums@gmail.com. His poems have appeared in Sugar House Review, Natural Bridge, The Cape Rock, and other journals. He lives in Purcellville, Virginia, near the Blue Ridge Mountains, with his GF and a small zoo of household pets.

Sudhanshu Chopra is a poet, wordsmith, and pun-enthusiast. Thirty and rootless, he is fascinated by nature and frustrated by its incomprehension.

He wishes we had evolved better or not at all. It is the midway that causes Catch 22 situations, which are quite troubling, mentally and otherwise. Some of his work has been published online on Panophy Magazine, Bending Genres Journal, Mocking Heart Review, Right Hand Pointing, Sonic Boom, among others, and in print anthologies, namely, Purifying Wind and The Larger Geometry: Poems for Peace. He blogs at The Bard and tweets at @_monkey_life. Most importantly, he is available to be hired immediately.

Rajendra Shepherd's poems have been published by the British Medical Journal, The Good Men Project, Dragon Poet Review, and most recently by @chunklit. His latest spoken word appears in The Dreamers Anthology.

Pasquale Trozzolo is an entrepreneur and founder of Trozzolo Communications Group, one of the leading advertising and public relations firms in the Midwest. In addition to building his business, he also spent time as a race car driver and grad school professor. Now with too much time on his hands, he continues to complicate his life by living out as many retirement clichés as possible. He's up to the Ps. In 2020 his work has been published in Sunspot Literary Journal, The Virgin Islands Source, The Pangolin Review, and more. His debut chapbook Before the Distance is forthcoming by Poetry Box Press in December of this year.

Jeremy Nathan Marks lives in London, Ontario. Recent poetry and prose can/will be found in So It Goes, Right-Hand Pointing, Chiron Review, Mobius, Unlikely Stories, Dissident Voice, The Write Life, Muddy River, Rat's Ass Review, Wilderness House, Isacoustic, and Anti-Heroine Chic.

Brittany Coffman is a 20-year-old writer based in New York. Her writing explores dark corners as a way to portray language. She enjoys creating weird and wonderful expressions of the mundane and fantasy.

Kim Whysall-Hammond is a Londoner living in a small country town in Southern England. An expert in obsolete telecommunications arcana, Kim believes, against all evidence, that she is a good dancer. She has been published by Ink, Sweat and Tears, Amaryllis, Total Eclipse, Fourth and Sycamore, London Grip, and Crannóg, amongst others. You can find her at <https://thecheesesellerswife.wordpress.com/>

Morgan Boyer is the author of The Serotonin Cradle (Finishing Line Press, 2018) and graduate of Carlow University. Boyer has been featured in Kallisto Gaia Press, Pennsylvania English, Thirty West Publishing House, and the Pittsburgh City Paper. Boyer lives in Pittsburgh, PA with her family.

Mugu Ganesan is an emerging poet based out of Minneapolis, Minnesota. He writes poetry in English and Urdu. His poetry has appeared or is forthcoming in The Hindu, Burning House Press, and Scarlet Leaf Review. He has participated in poetry workshops at the UCLA Extension and The Loft Literary Center. Mugu's poetry is focused on expressing the strife that comes with being human through his observations and life experiences across cultures and continents.

Rushmila Khan is an aspiring Bangladeshi poet and screenwriter. She is currently in 11th grade, has worked as the editor of a magazine at school, and is working to publish a non-profit publication herself. Her book reviews have been published on The Bookshelf. Art films and books bring her the most joy.

Kenneth Pobo has a new chapbook published from the State Poetry Society of Alabama called Your Place Or Mine. Forthcoming from Assure Press is his book called Uneven Steven.

Bill Stifler teaches at Chattanooga State Community College and is a graduate of the writing program at the University of Tennessee, Chattanooga. Originally from southeastern Pennsylvania, Stifler has lived in the Chattanooga area since 1972. His work has been published in Science News, Verse-Virtual, Switched-On Gutenberg, Fractured Voices, and elsewhere. <https://www.billstifler.org>

Richard Oyama's work has appeared in Premonitions: The Kaya Anthology of New Asian North American Poetry, The Nuyorasian Anthology, Breaking Silence, Dissident Song, A Gift of Tongues, About Place, Konch Magazine, Pirene's Fountain, Tribes, Malpais Review, Anak Sastra, and other literary journals. The Country They Know (Neuma Books 2005) is his first collection of poetry. He has a M.A. in English: Creative Writing from San Francisco State University. Oyama taught at California College of Arts in Oakland, University of California at Berkeley and University of New Mexico. His first novel in a trilogy, A Riot Goin' On, is forthcoming.

Michael Lee Johnson lived ten years in Canada, Vietnam era. Today he is a poet in Itasca, DuPage County, Illinois, published in 1078 small press magazines in 39 countries; 210 YouTube poetry videos. He has been nominated for 2 Pushcart Prize awards poetry 2015/1 Best of the Net 2016/2 Best of the Net 2017, 2 Best of the Net 2018. He is Editor-in-chief of 3 poetry anthologies, Moonlight Dreamers of Yellow Haze, Dandelion in a Vase of Roses, and Warrior with Wings: The Best in Contemporary Poetry.

Raised on a rice and catfish farm in eastern Arkansas, CL Bledsoe is the author of more than twenty books, including the poetry collections Riceland, Trashcans in Love, and his newest, Grief Bacon, as well as the Necro-Files novel series and the flash fiction collection Ray's Sea World. Bledsoe co-writes the humor blog How to Even, with Michael Gushue located here: <https://medium.com/@howtoeven> His own blog, Not Another TV Dad, is located here: <https://medium.com/@clbledsoe> He's been published in hundreds of journals, newspapers, and websites that you've probably never heard of. Bledsoe lives in northern Virginia with his daughter.

Jenean McBrearty is a graduate of San Diego State University, who taught Political Science and Sociology. Her fiction, poetry, and photographs have been published in over two-hundred print and on-line journals. Her how-to book, Writing Beyond the Self; How to Write Creative Non-fiction that Gets Published was published by Vine Leaves Press in 2018. She won the Eastern Kentucky English Department Award for Graduate Creative Non-fiction in 2011, and a Silver Pen Award in 2015 for her noir short story: "Red's Not Your Color." She lives in Kentucky and writes full time when she's not watching classic movies and eating chocolate.

Cheryl Caesar lived in Paris, Tuscany, and Sligo for 25 years; she earned her doctorate in comparative literature at the Sorbonne and taught literature and phonetics. She now teaches writing at Michigan State University. She gives poetry readings locally and serves on the board of the Lansing Poetry Club. Last year she published over a hundred poems in the U.S., Germany, India, Bangladesh, Yemen and Zimbabwe, and won third prize in the Singapore Poetry Contest for her poem on global warming. She has been swimming with wild dolphins, and it is one of the high points of her life. Her chapbook Flatman: Poems of Protest in the Trump Era is now available from Amazon and Goodreads. <http://caesarc.msu.domains/>

Nancy Byrne Iannucci is the author of Temptation of Wood (Nixes Mate Review 2018) and Toxic, which will be released in 2020 (dancing girl press). Her poems have appeared in a number of publications including Gargoyle, Ghost City Press, Clementine Unbound, Three Drops from a Cauldron, 8 Poems, Glass: A Journal of Poetry (Poets Resist), Hobo Camp Review, and Typehouse Literary Magazine. Nancy is a Long Island, NY, native who now resides in Troy, NY, where she teaches history at the Emma Willard School.

Marc Frazier has published in journals including The Gay and Lesbian Review, Slant, Permafrost, Plainsongs, Poet Lore, et al. Marc, the recipient of an Illinois Arts Council Award for poetry, has been nominated for a Pushcart Prize. His books, including his latest, Willingly, are available at online booksellers. See Marc Frazier Author page on Facebook, @marcfrazier45 on Twitter.

Christian Hanz Lozada is the product of an immigrant Filipino and descendent of the American Revolution and Confederacy. He has co-written the poetry book Leave with More Than You Came With from Arroyo Seco Press. My writing has appeared in Cultural Weekly, Hawaii Pacific Review, Dryland: A Literary Journal (forthcoming), A&U Magazine and various other journals and anthologies. I have been invited to read and speak at the Autry Museum, the Twin Towers Correctional Facility, and other places throughout Southern California. I currently live in San Pedro, CA, where I teach my neighbor's kids at Los Angeles Harbor College.

Harriet Shenkman is a Professor Emerita at City University of New York. Her poetry has been published in numerous national and international journals and she has published two poetry chapbooks, Teetering and The Present Abandoned. She was born in Brooklyn, New York. She is working on a novel. <https://shenkman.wixsite.com/harriet>

Martin Willitts Jr has 25 chapbooks including the Turtle Island Quarterly Editor's Choice Award, The Wire Fence Holding Back the World (Flowstone Press, 2017), plus 20 full-length collections including the Blue Light Award 2019, The Temporary World. His recent book is Unfolding Towards Love (Wipf and Stock, 2020).

Lauren Scharhag is the author of fourteen books, including Requiem for a Robot Dog (Cajun Mutt Press) and Languages, First and Last (Cyberwit Press). Her work has appeared in over 100 literary venues around the world. Recent honors include the Seamus Burns Creative Writing Prize, two Best of the Net nominations, and acceptance into the 2021 Antarctic Poetry Exhibition. She lives in Kansas City, MO. To learn more about her work, visit: www.laurenscharhag.blogspot.com

Esther Sun is a Chinese-American writer from the Silicon Valley in Northern California. A 2020 American Voices nominee, she has been recognized for her writing by the National YoungArts Foundation, Bennington College, and the Alliance for Young Writers and Artists. Esther's poems are forthcoming from or have appeared in Up North Lit, Vagabond City, Anthropocene, and more. www.esthercsun.com Abhinita Mohanty is from Odisha, India. She is pursuing a PhD in the Department of Humanities and Social Sciences, IIT Madras. She has a master's degree in Sociology and is passionate about writing and poetry. Her works have been published in Outlook Magazine (website), Feminism in India (FI), New Asian Writing, Burgundy Balloon, Trouvaille Review, Tribune newspaper, and Women's web.

Sherre Vernon is a seeker of a mystical grammar and a recipient of the Parent-Writer Fellowship at The Martha's Vineyard Institute of Creative Writing. She has two award-winning chapbooks: Green Ink Wings (fiction) and The Name is Perilous (poetry). Readers describe Sherre's work as heart-breaking, richly layered, lyrical and intelligent. To read more of her work visit www.sherrevernon.com/publications and tag her into conversation @sherrevernon.

Robert Grew is a senior citizen, 85 years of age today. His email is 'grouchygrew@yahoo.com' and he is on Facebook as Robert Louis Grew. He began writing a flurry of verse in my 60's.

Anita Kestin is a medical doctor with a varied career and the gray hairs to match. For most of her career, she has worked in a traditional academic setting but for the past ten years she has worked as the medical director of a nursing facility, as a hospice physician, in the locked ward of a psychiatric facility, and in public health settings addressing patient safety issues. She is also the daughter of Holocaust survivors, the wife of an environmental lawyer, the mother of wonderful grown children, a grandmother, and a progressive activist. She is attempting to calm her nerves during the pandemic by writing, revising, and finishing the memoir she has been writing for many years.

Raphael Luis J. Salise currently a sophomore at the University of the Philippines Mindanao, under the BA English Creative Writing program. He likes to read poems, plays, and short stories by Filipino authors as he also aspires to someday become a successful writer like them. You may contact him at rjsalise@up.edu.ph or @raphael_salise on Twitter and Instagram.

William Doreski has published three critical studies and several collections of poetry. His work has appeared in many print and online journals. He has taught at Emerson College, Goddard College, Boston University, and Keene State College. His most recent books are Water Music and Train to Providence. Williamdoreski.blogspot.com Julia Rubin is a writer, poet, and professional queer aunt from Boston. Her work has been published in The Collapsar, Mortar Magazine, Typo Magazine, and BUST Magazine, among others. Follow her on Instagram @glitter_topcoat to keep up with her writing, baby adventures, and collection of overalls.

Tim Kahl [<http://www.timkahl.com>] is the author of Possessing Yourself (CW Books, 2009), The Century of Travel (CW Books, 2012), The String of Islands (Dink, 2015) and Omnishambles (Bald Trickster Press 2018). His work has been published in Prairie Schooner, Drunken Boat, Mad Hatters' Review, Indiana Review, Metazen, Ninth Letter, Sein und Werden, Notre Dame Review, The Really System, and many other journals in the U.S. He is also editor of Clade Song [<http://www.cladesong.com>]. He is the vice president and events coordinator of The Sacramento Poetry Center. He also has a public installation in Sacramento {In Scarcity We Bare The Teeth}. He plays flutes, guitars, ukuleles, charangos and cavaquinhos. He currently teaches at California State University, Sacramento, where he sings lieder while walking on campus between classes.

Caitlin Upshall holds a B.A. in English from Western Washington University. Her work has been published in The Sweet Tree Review and Entropy Magazine, and is forthcoming in The Tiny Journal. In her spare time, she enjoys reading scholarly articles about the Great Emu War. <https://caitlin-upshall.wixsite.com/caitlin-upshall>

Okpeta, Gideon Iching is a poet, and essayist. He's Nigerian. Okpeta is a contributing writer for Josbuastruth magazine (JT MAG), and crispng.com. Some of his poems have appeared at poem hunter, powerpoetry (a poetry community for Teachers and students) and pondersavant. while others are upcoming or awaiting publication in different journals and magazines. Recently, his work has been considered for inclusion in the second issue of words and whispers journal. At his spare time, he writes and plays the keyboard.

Carolyn Adams' poetry and art have appeared in Panophy, Amsterdam Quarterly, Visitant, Bryant Literary Review, and Trajectory, among others. Nominated for a Pushcart and for Best of the Net, she is a staff editor for Mojave River Review, and a poetry editor for VoiceCatcher.

B. A. France is a poet and writer working in the Chesapeake Bay Watershed. His poetry has appeared in several journals including Akistu Quarterly, cattails, and Shot Glass Journal. His chapbook, Season's End, is forthcoming from Alabaster Leaves, an imprint of Kelsay Books.

Jessica Covil is a PhD Candidate in English at Duke, pursuing graduate certificates in African & African American Studies and Gender, Sexuality, & Feminist Studies. She enjoys reading her poems aloud at open mics, and her work has appeared in SWWIM Every Day, What Rough Beast, Whale Road Review, Rise Up Review, The Maynard, Oye Drum, and One Hand Clapping.

Yong Takahashi was a finalist in The Restless Books Prize for New Immigrant Writing, Southern Fried Karma Novel Contest, Gemini Magazine

Short Story Contest, and Georgia Writers Association Flash Fiction Contest. She was awarded Best Pitch at the Atlanta Writers Club Conference. The Escape to Candyland, a short story collection, was published in 2020. To learn more about Yong, visit: yctwriter.com

Naima Rashid is an author, poet, and literary translator. Her first book, Defiance of the Rose (Oxford University Press, 2019) was a translation of selected verses by Pakistani poet Perveen Shakir from Urdu into English. Her forthcoming works include Bungalow by the River (Penguin India, 2022), a translation of the Urdu novel Naulakhi Kothi by Ali Akbar Natiq, as well as her own fiction and poetry. Her writings have appeared in Asymptote, The Scores, Poetry at Sangam, The Aleph Review, Newsline, and other places. She was long-listed for National Poetry Competition 2019.

Linda M. Crate's works have been published in numerous magazines and anthologies both online and in print. She is the author of six poetry chapbooks, the latest of which is More Than Bone Music (Clare Songbirds Publishing House, March 2019). She's also the author of the novel Phoenix Tears (Czykmate Books, June 2018). Recently she has published two full-length poetry collections Vampire Daughter (Dark Gatekeeper Gaming, February 2020) and The Sweetest Blood (Cyberwit, February 2020).

Daniel Edward Moore lives in Washington on Whidbey Island. His poems are forthcoming in Kestrel, Nebo Literary Journal, Main Street Rag, Nixes Mate Review, Blue River Review, Verdad Magazine, Impossible Archetype, Sheila-Na-Gig, Lullwater Review, and Flint Hills Review. He is the author of the chapbook Boys (Duck Lake Books) and Waxing the Dents, a finalist for the Brick Road Poetry Prize from Brick Road Poetry Press.

Frances Spurrier is a poet, storyteller and blogger. Her work has been widely published and anthologized in print and online. She holds an MFA from Kingston University and is a Fellow of the Higher Education Academy. Her interests lie in the connections between language, spirit and environment. She blogs at <https://volatilerune.blog>

Mandira Pattnaik is a writer born and raised in India. Her work has appeared in The Times of India, Eclectica, Clover White, Splonk, Heavy Feather

Review, Nightingale & Sparrow, Lunate, Panophyzine, and Spelk, among others, and forthcoming in Amsterdam Quarterly, Ilanot Review, and Watershed Review. She appeared in NFFD NZ'20 and Flash Flood UK 2020.

Elizabeth Spencer Spragins is a poet and writer who taught in community colleges for more than a decade. Her work has been published extensively in Europe, Asia, and North America. She is the author of With No Bridle for the Breeze: Ungrounded Verse (Shanti Arts Publishing) and The Language of Bones: American Journeys Through Bardic Verse (Kelsay Books). www.authorsden.com/elizabethspragins

Marcy McNally is a Florida-based writer whose extensive communications background includes award-winning, international advertising, public relations, and marketing campaigns. Her poetry, short stories and articles, have appeared in numerous print and online publications. Samples of Marcy's published poetry include: "Homage to O'Keeffe," originally published by Tiny Spoon, Issue 1, Spring 2019, followed by Interstice, Volume 15, 2019, "Baywatch," "Garden of Eden," Middle House Review, April 2019, "Taxidermist," Lily Poetry Review, Volume 1, Issue 2, Summer 2019, "Crystal snowflakes," Haiku Journal #62, April 2019, "Turquoise Journey," published by Wild Roof Journal, Summer 2020. www.marcymcnally.com

Mantz Yorke is a former science teacher and researcher living in Manchester, England. His poems have appeared in print magazines, anthologies and e-magazines in the UK, Ireland, The Netherlands, Israel, Canada, the US, Australia and Hong Kong. His collection Voyager is published by Dempsey & Windle.

Mark A. Fisher is a writer, poet, and playwright living in Tehachapi, CA. His poetry has appeared in: Angel City Review, A Sharp Piece of Awesome, Altadena Poetry Review, Penumbra, Unlikely Stories Mark V, and many other places. His first chapbook, drifter, is available from Amazon. His second, hour of lead, won the 2017 San Gabriel Valley Poetry Chapbook Contest. His plays have appeared on California stages in Pine Mountain Club, Tehachapi, Bakersfield, and Hayward. He has also won cooking ribbons at the Kern County Fair.

Anne Fricke is a poet, author, storyteller, podcast host, wife, and mother. She lives in far Northern California, writes daily, and travels when she can. She has published two collections of poetry, a novel, a journal for parents of children with special needs, and was co-editor of a poetry collection on the theme of shelter-in-place. More about her work can be found at annefricke.com.

Kristin LaFollette is a writer, artist, and photographer and is the author of the chapbook, Body Parts (GFT Press, 2018). She is a professor at the University of Southern Indiana and serves as the Art Editor at Mud Season Review. You can visit her on Twitter at @k_lafollette03 or on her website at kristinlafollette.com.

Luke Carmichael Valmadrid is a public health graduate student at UNC-Chapel Hill, but continually finds himself in the arts. He was a member of the 8th cohort of the First Wave Scholars program, who shared their joy and passion for poetry with him. Outside of writing, Luke enjoys research, chamber music, and cooking tofu.

Roy Duffield was honored to perform at last year's Barcelona Beat Poetry Festival alongside some of Spain's most successful contemporary performance poets. His work has recently appeared (or is on it's way) in The Trouvaille Review, Harpy Hybrid Review, Night Bus to Speakers' Corner, Anti-Hero in Chic, About Face: Poems about Body Image, The Dawntreader, The Medley, and an as yet untitled anthology to raise money for Marie Curie nurses during coronavirus. He sometimes publishes some micropoetry on Instagram as @drinking_traveller.

